O2 Fitness director fights back after paralyzing injury

Chris Williams is 'champion of the one percent'

ELIZABETH BUSH

beth@thedanielislandnews.com

Inside the O2 Fitness facility on Seven Farms Drive on Daniel Island, the sounds of the quest for betterment ring out on any given day. Feet pound on a fleet of treadmills. Weights clink back into position lift after lift. Puffs of air expel from bodies pushing themselves to the limit. But on a recent afternoon, a voice cut through the clamor.

"I want you to explosively push and land outside!" exclaimed Chris Williams, Daniel Island O2 Fitness Director and General Manager, as he led a client working to improve his tennis game through some floor exercises. "...That's it. That's the cadence right there."

At Chris' direction, the client employed a slight change in movement to focus on different muscles.

"What's the 'why' behind this exercise?" asked Chris. "...When that tennis ball is coming – you need to be able to respond."

There's always an answer to the 'why' question, Chris tells all of his clients, and it should fuel their work-outs. No one in the room knows that better than he does.

Why did he find himself alone on a mountain highway in North Carolina four years ago after a horrific motorcycle accident, with no feeling from the chest down? Why did he survive? Why was he able to stand on his own two feet when doctors told him it was likely he would never walk again? Why should he even try?

Why? Because Chris Williams had other plans.

The accident that would change his life happened near the Blue Ridge Parkway on July 14, 2012, about two weeks after his 30th birthday. Chris lay on the side of the road in the hot July sun for over an hour before someone found him. He suffered multiple injuries – a C3-C4 cervical fracture, T7-T8 thoracic fracture, a spinal cord injury at T-7, a broken right scapula, 14 broken ribs, a broken right hip, and an ACL-MCL posterior meniscus tear. His oxygen level had dropped to about 80 percent and his resting heart rate was in the mid to low 40s.

"I was able to lay there and control my breathing," recalled Chris, who played football in college while attending the University of Georgia. "I had no movement from the chest down...complete paralysis."

A fitness professional who holds a master's degree in exercise science kinesiology, Chris was at the peak of good health at the time of his accident. And he put all of what he learned into practice.

"If it wasn't for my dedication to fitness, the support of my family, and my willingness to try to get better every single day, I don't think I ever would have recovered."

And, perhaps most importantly, he refused to take "no" for an answer. Early on in his treatment, when he couldn't lift even a one pound weight with his feet, his physical therapist told him it was time to quit. Chris got back to his hospital room and found $1.76 in change beside his bed. He put the coins into a sock, pulled it around his foot and got to work.

"I lifted it and lifted it and lifted it, maybe a million times, until the next morning when I could go back to physical therapy and show my therapist that I could do it!"

It was a pivotal moment.

"For me, it meant the world to just get a little bit better, to get a little bit stronger... When we meet adversity in our lives, and we're challenged to overcome it, whether it be with your family, whether it be in relationships, or whether it be with regards to your fitness, we have to take that daily incremental approach to

Richard Harris' historical fiction is top notch

Our annual book recommendation edition is always one of my favorites. It's great to learn what other people are reading and what they recommend. I look forward to reading many of the titles recommended by our readers this year.

On my part, I am recommending the historical novels by Robert Harris, many of which made it to the top of the New York Times Bestsellers list.

This past winter I picked up Harris' novel, "An Officer and a Spy" at our Daniel Island branch of the Berkeley County library. It is based on the infamous Dreyfus Affair, which in 1895 resulted in the conviction of treason of Jewish French officer Alfred Dreyfus, which included an imposition of life imprisonment at Devil's Island.

The story is told from the perspective of Lt. Col. Georges Picquart, an officer in charge of what today we would term a counterintelligence unit. Not long after looking into the case, Picquart realizes that a spy does indeed exist in the ranks of the French Army but that it is not Dreyfus. Facing resistance from his superiors, Picquart engages in a quest to ferret out the real spy and to exonerate Dreyfus.

I won't spill the ending or go into detail on all the twists and turns, but this fictional account of a true historical injustice is riveting and makes the reader consider past and present forms of incarceration and criminal procedure while totally engaging the reader in an enthralling mystery and crime story of the highest caliber.

After reading "An Officer and a Spy" I devoured many of the other titles by Harris in our library, including several excellent stories based in ancient Rome ("Dictator" and "Pompeii"). One of his best known works, which was also made into an HBO movie, "Fatherland," is based on the scenario that Germany won the Second World War.

All of Harris' books are meticulously and thoroughly researched, serving as excellent history lessons as well as entertaining fiction. If you are a fan of the historical novel, these books are for you.

Marriage/Relationships: The Secret to Making Them Work?

STEVE FERBER

Let's start with three: 1. Stop trying to change your partner; 2. Never begin a sentence with the word "you"; and 3. Avoid trigger phrases (e.g., "you're being just like your mother/father").

And here's three more: 1. Know your partner's love language; 2. When you spend time together, try to make it "sacred" time; and 3. Hold your hugs for at least 20 seconds ("that's how long it takes for your oxytocin – the 'cuddle hormone' – to kick in," explains Dr. Jim Walkup).

We all know the basics: patience, kindness, support, respect and trust. But we are human, so every now and then it's good to pause, collect ourselves, and re-focus on what makes a relationship tick, and keep on ticking. Here then are a few tips, culled from hundreds we've come across. Hopefully you'll find a few that will make your relationship thrive.

Don't try to change your partner. Says Dr. Rick Kirschner, Relationship Coach: "The biggest waste of effort in a marriage is trying to change your spouse, since the problems you have with your spouse are generally problems you have in yourself. When you try to change your spouse you come across as a nag and wind up sending the message that 'who you are is not enough.' Nobody likes getting that message, and it leads to distance and polarization. Let your spouse be who he or she is and focus on changing yourself."

Spend time together. But make it "sacred" time. Marni Battista, CPC, founder of Dating with Dignity, says that to keep the spark alive and avoid 'roommate syndrome', "couples have to understand the notion of spending 'time' together versus creating 'sacred' time together. Spending time at social events, time with family and doing 'chores' together does not count as sacred time. Instead, carve out special time to not only be intimate, but also ensure that you continue to share new experiences together such as hiking, exploring someplace new, or arranging a stay-cation in your own city."

Control or connection? Psychologist and marriage counselor Lee Horton points out: "You can have control or you can have connection with your partner, but you can't have both. Pursue connection!"

Know your partner's love language. In his Huffington Post article, Walkup explains: "This one is so important. Just because your mom sang your praises for cleaning up your room doesn't mean your partner is as impressed by the act. We each value different loving behaviors and gestures in our relationship. Often couples have completely different love languages." Walkup encourages us to periodically ask: "What things have I done that make you feel the most loved?" Walkup also recommends grabbing a copy of Gary Chapman's "The Five Languages of Love."

Touch every chance you get. "This isn't just about sex," according to a piece at sixseeds.patheos.com, "although sex is another consistent habit of happy couples. Physical touch includes cuddling, kissing, hugging, foot rubs, shoulder rubs, holding hands and putting your arm around each other. The simple act of touch binds a [couple's] hearts together like nothing else. If you are one of the many in a "touch-starved" [relationship], make it a priority to bring more affection and physical touch" to the relationship.

Watch those words! Marcia Sirota, a psychiatrist and the author of "Women Decoded: The Secret Strategy for Relationship Success," shares 10 phrases to avoid. Here are three:

"You're being just like your father/mother." Says psychologist Megan Fleming, as quoted in Brittany Wong's Huffington Post piece: "It doesn't matter how healthy a relationship your partner has with his or her parents: comparing them to dear old dad or mom mid-argument is a particularly low blow, even if the comparison is true."

"Will you please just relax." Says Sirota, as quoted by Wong: "Unless your goal is to prolong your partner's anger during an argument, don't tell them to 'calm down' or 'relax'."

"We need to talk, but now is not a good time." Psychologist Susan Krauss, as quoted by Wong, explains that phrases such as these create "anxiety without providing an avenue for alleviating that anxiety . . . It's also a controlling statement. If you feel the need to talk, then wait until you have the time and ask if your partner has whatever length of time you need."

Ten and Five Years Ago in THE DANIEL ISLAND NEWS

TEN YEARS AGO

School board passes budget with tax decrease!

(From the 7/06/06 edition) Sydney Brusse, Maggie Robinson

In the July 6, 2006 edition of the paper our top news story was that the Daniel Island Company planned to submit a conservation minded proposal to the States Port Authority to purchase the 1,300 acres of land owned by the port on Daniel Island.

Our top feature was on yoga – the classes on Daniel Island, including kids yoga and yoga at Pierce Park Pavilion, all led by island yoga teacher Diane Zalka.

Now this was news – the school board passed a budget with a small tax decrease!

FIVE YEARS AGO

Land under Don Holt bridge is known as Clouter Creek

In the July 7, 2011 edition of the paper we reported on the mounds of dirt often worked into large hills visible from the Don Holt Bridge, explaining that the land on the “east side of the Cooper River underneath the Don Holt Bridge is known as Clouter Creek, and is just one of several dredge disposal sites in the Charleston area. Dredging is necessary to maintain a functioning harbor with a consistent depth. In an average year, 2 million cubic yards of dredged material are removed from Charleston Harbor Federal Channel. And Clouter Creek happens to be the site where material dredged from the Upper Harbor and Shipyard River ends up.”

The South Carolina State Ports Authority (SCSPA) owns the northern half of the Clouter Creek site, and the US Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) owns the southern portion. They work in concert to achieve what is essentially an ongoing earth-moving project. Clouter Creek is divided into four “cells,” and at any given time each cell is participating in one phase of a four-step process, one of which results in the creation of the mounds.

In other news, then Republican Presidential candidate Michele Bachmann greeted 300 plus local residents at Smythe Park on Daniel Island.

(From the 7/07/11 edition) Michele Bachmann, who promptly picked up a small child in the crowd, explained that she is a mother of five and was a foster mother to 23 children.

(From the 7/07/11 edition) Machinery at Clouter Creek moves dredged material, and in the process creates what appear to be science-fiction-sized ant hills.

Williams refused to take “no” for an answer

try to just get one percent better each day...and if we can do that, that one percent adds up.”

Chris continued to apply that “one percent” philosophy to his treatment. He spent hours after his PT sessions each day working on his own in the hospital gym. By the fourth month after his accident, he was walking. It is a lesson he hopes will offer encouragement to anyone facing obstacles.

“I wanted to get better as badly as I wanted to breathe,” said Chris, who studied up online to research the best way to achieve success in his recovery. “When you can take that approach and that mindset, when improving yourself, whatever it is your doctor told you – that you needed to lose 30 pounds to help your cholesterol, that if you don’t lose the weight your knee is going to keep bothering you, or your back problems are going to persist... When you want something badly enough, you can set your mind that you’re going to conquer it.”

So he did. Chris was an inpatient in the hospital for six months and then took part in outpatient rehab for three and a half years, both on his own and at MUSC and Imagine Physical Therapy. On July 5, he is scheduled to have surgery on his lumbar spine, which was crushed in the accident.

“This could be the last piece of the puzzle,” he said, of this final procedure. “But I’m gonna continue to work and be as good as I can possibly be, and if I can’t be as physically strong as I was once, I am going to be mentally and emotionally stronger than I ever was... That’s definitely the plan.”

But there is another important aspect to Chris’s plan. And that is to share what he’s learning through his experience not only with the fitness clients he works with at O2, but also with anyone in need of a message of encouragement about overcoming adversity in life, in business and in health. As the fourth anniversary of his accident approaches, Chris recently launched an inspirational speaking tour. He has already addressed audiences at MUSC, Church of the Holy Cross on Daniel Island (Boy Scout Troop 519), and the Daniel Island Library. In October, he will speak to members of the Daniel Island Rotary Club. Part of his dispatch is to share with groups that when facing a mountain of hardship, there are three types of responses – you can be a quitter, a camper, or a climber.

“The most common are the quitters,” he said, while speaking at the library on June 23. “They see the mountain. They see the challenge. They get the news they didn’t want to hear and they just quit. They never even try.”

Next are the campers, he continued. They are the most dangerous in his opinion, because they do just enough to get by, and they encourage everyone else to do the same. The final group – the climbers – are the most inspirational, Chris said.

PROVIDED

A motorcycle accident left Chris Williams paralyzed from the chest down in July 2012. He is shown here in a hospital bed in the early days of his recovery. Doctors told him he would likely never walk again. But within four months, armed with relentless determination and perseverance, Chris defied those odds and took his first steps.

“We don’t want to be quitters, and we certainly don’t want to be campers. We want to be climbers. We want to be the type of people that reach the top of the mountain, that face the challenge of hardship and adversity head on, and look for the next challenge... Once you get to the top, run back down and grab some of those quitters, and then run halfway up and grab some of those campers, and bring them to the top...and show people that adversity can be overcome, step by step, one percent by one percent.”

And through his own life, Chris is doing just that. Because he has learned that it’s not so much what happens to us that is the most revealing – it’s what happens next.

“I’ve learned not to focus on who I was, but on who I want to be,” said Chris, who displays no visible remnants of his accident to the outside world, aside from a scar on his back from surgery and a slight limp. “...I had to believe in myself, that I could try, and the miracle was in the ability just to try and get a little bit better.”

Back at O2 Fitness, amidst the clanging of weights and the whirl of the stationary exercise bikes, Chris Williams brings more than top notch education, training, and experience to the table when he works with those seeking to meet their fitness goals. His company’s core values provide him with the perfect platform for using his story to help others.

“Come on!” Chris shouts, as he encourages the tennis player to push on, even when it seems his client can’t move another muscle. “Let’s go! You’ve got to stick with it.”

Why? Because it can make all the difference in the world.

To find out how your group can book Chris for a speaking engagement, please send an email to cwilliams@o2fitnessclubs.com or call 706-254-2184.

What's the big idea?

Investors get seven 'pitches' at DI Club on June 29

beth@thedanielislandnews.com

When many of us think about eager entrepreneurs pitching their products or services to potential investors, we conjure up images of the popular television show Shark Tank – a program known for its biting remarks and competitive wrangling.

But for those who took part in the “What’s the Big Idea?” pitch night held at Daniel Island Club on June 29, there were no cutthroat barbs to be heard. In fact, a predatory atmosphere was intentionally missing.

As explained by the event’s planner and self-proclaimed “Destiny Coach” Dianne Shaver, CEO of Entrepreneur Mind World, the program had a different objective.

“This is not Shark Tank,” Shaver told the crowd in her opening remarks. “... You will not see somebody saying ‘OK, I’ll give you $250,000 for 25 percent equity’... Those conversations will happen after the event. What the entrepreneurs are doing (here) is letting our investors know ‘this is what we’re doing, this is what we’re looking for, and this is our goal.’”

The event provided a comfortable environment where entrepreneurs could share focused information on their products and services with potential investors, who in turn were supportive and offered positive feedback. Presented by The Daniel Island News and sponsored by Daniel Island Real Estate, SunTrust, and the Daniel Island Business Association, the program began five weeks ago when participants enrolled in Shaver’s Pitch U, an intensive training program for start-ups.

Shaver had several “students” to shepherd through the process – Jarrett Hodson of Because You Served, a free real estate listing and marketing service for veterans; Sean Burger of Scrubzone, an automated hand-washing machine; Steve and Gail Salomon of Mission Essentials, a skin care company that produces natural, Earth-friendly products; Jesse Williams and Richard Souffrant of BidLan, Inc., a software and consulting firm that aids minority businesses in bid procurement; Tomeaka Fladger of Thumb A Ride and All Things are Possible, a social web solutions company; and Rich Estes and Justin Hudd of Hometracker, a firm offering web-based home history reports. One additional entrepreneur asked not to be identified.

Presenters were given five minutes to pitch their ideas to an expert panel of business-savvy investors with impressive resumes – William Harley, Lenna Ruth MacDonald, David Mendez, Jack Liles, and Brad Rose. Time was then given for investors to ask follow-up questions of the entrepreneurs. Collectively, pitchers requested over $4.4 million in financial help to launch or support their new companies. Overall, the process and program received multiple kudos from all involved.

Hodson was first to present, telling panelists he is confident his business, Because You Served, will revolutionize client generation for real estate professionals while providing a valuable benefit to military veterans.

“I thought the entire program was great,” said Hodson, who reported this event was the first time he has pitched to potential capital investors. “If you could have seen our progress from early on, the first week until today, some of these guys had it down pretty well, but it was unbelievable how much better we got week after week... It was a great experience for me and I think for everybody else involved.”

South African native Sean Burger, who pitched for Scrubzone, told panelists that his product saves time, water and lives by providing a nine second automated hand wash to users. After his presentation, he expressed deep appreciation for the opportunity to share his vision.

“It’s incredible,” said Burger, who believes his company is on track to become the world’s leading hygiene solution in preventing the spread of harmful bacteria and pathogens. “You get put up on stage, the nerves straight off the bat swing you, but you’ve rehearsed long enough that you make sure you know what you’re doing! At the end of the day, you’re talking about a company – and it’s your company. If you struggle to do that, then why are you on stage in the first place?”

Burger went on to compliment Shaver and her

Pitch U and “What’s the Big Idea?” programs for giving him the incentive to push Scrubzone in the right direction.

“All of these things that she’s put together really help,” added Burger. “And hopefully the seven of us will really get to that next stage... I’m doing this because I want to make money and I want to create a difference in this world.”

For Daniel Island residents Steve and Gail Salomon, the event was also the first time they have officially pitched their company, Mission Essentials, to investors.

“It’s pretty exciting!” said Steve. “I was pretty nervous. Typically, I’m putting together long slide presentations... This one we had five minutes, so I talked really fast to try to get it all in... For us, really most of it was questions versus feedback, which was good.”

An added bonus for Salomon was finding out after the program that investor Brad Rose and his family are already users of Mission Essentials products.

“The odds that someone in the room would be using our stuff is pretty good,” he said. “... We’re hopeful. These are the key guys. Maybe somebody has an interest and they’ll give us a call!”

Jesse Williams of BidLan, Inc, said his web-based company has created a vendor management tool that offers disadvantaged businesses a way to connect with larger companies in need of their services. He is hopeful the investors who heard his message will buy into the idea.

“I thought it was good,” said Williams, when asked about the effectiveness of the program.

Entrepreneurs pitch their ideas

From WHAT'S THE BIG IDEA on PAGE 10

"I learned a lot. Every time we met, we made notes. I'm hoping this turns into something good!"

Seeking a way for individuals who are unemployed, due to a lack of transportation, to find jobs and build workforce experience, Tomeaka Fladger has launched "Thumb A Ride." The online social ride share platform matches those in need of a ride to work with another driver's natural commute. Fladger believes the carpooling service app could be a game changer for people at the bottom of the socioeconomic ladder.

"A lack of transportation does cause a decision not to pursue employment or to stay passive," she said, in her remarks to the panelists.

Fladger got high praise from several investors for the idea, as well as good feedback on things she can focus on moving forward.

"Now that it's over, I'm glad I participated!" she said, after her presentation. "I am not at the same stage as everyone else, so it did make it a little more difficult for me. But over the five weeks, I did gain more confidence! I think it was all very positive. Where I work every day, I know the product is needed. So it's just a matter of how do I make it happen? How do I make it work?"

If you can order a report on a car's maintenance history before buying it, shouldn't you be able to do the same thing for the purchase of a home? Rich Estes of Hometrackr thinks so. His company provides free home history reports to those in the market to buy a house. He told the group his company already has solid technology, proven market demand, and a great team at the helm. He believes the timing is right to bring new investors on board.

"I thought the event was very well put on," said Estes, a former Daniel Island builder. "There are a lot of pitch events put on all over the country, and in Charleston more and more. They're very start-up driven and usually done in these impromptu places. But this one was pretty classy! You just don't see that much."

Estes went on to praise the mentors provided through the program, including Earl Bridges of Good Done Great, whom he said helped transform his presentation. As for any future investments into his company, he is cautiously optimistic.

"I've pitched enough to not necessarily have that expectation," he added. "I think investors don't like that expectation to be placed on them. That's my opinion... So when I reach out to them, I'm just gonna call them and say 'Hey, let's have a cup of coffee and talk some business!'"

But at least two of the panelists at the program do plan to give serious thought to investing into the businesses they heard about at the event. While they aren't announcing plans just yet, they were certainly encouraged by what they heard.

"They are almost all very impressive business models," said Jack Liles, a Citadel graduate with a broad background in sales and marketing leadership. "And at varying degrees of maturity, from just an idea to people making money at it. These things are great. It's a good opportunity to connect investors with potential opportunities, but hopefully (the entrepreneurs) learn stuff, too."

It can be tough, admits Liles, but perseverance can make all difference.

"Most serial entrepreneurs, they're gonna flush through five, six, eight or ten ideas until they get the one that sticks and works. It's as much an exercise in learning how to fail and when to fail and say 'OK, that one didn't work. Let's move on.'"

"I thought overall they were good," added investor Brad Rose, a Daniel Island resident, who began his career as an international commodity trader. "For me personally, I'm a product person, so when I see products or something tangible, I'm more interested in that... I thought there were some interesting things presented, so we'll see... I will definitely be looking at their ideas and talking to them!"

The glowing feedback was most certainly welcome news to Shaver, who is more than confident her charges will see an excellent return from their participation.

"My gut feeling is yes," said Shaver, when asked if she thought the pitchers would get some financial backing after the program. "... Sometimes it takes a year to get funded. It's a long conversation. It's not Shark Tank. Investors want to see certain things happening. There are milestones they want (the entrepreneurs) to reach. It's a very complex thing... But I am really proud of them. I've watched them through the whole process... Today was brilliant and they were all perfect!"

For additional information on Shaver's programs, please visit www.entrepreneurmind-world.com. The next "What's the Big Idea?" on Daniel Island will be held in March 2017.

Leadership Lessons from Pat Summitt

management moment

Doug Dickerson

"She could have coached any team, any sport, men's or women's. It wouldn't have mattered, because Pat could flat-out coach. I will miss her dearly, and I am honored to call her my friend." – Peyton Manning

As a native Tennessean and a proud member of Vol Nation, I was deeply saddened by the recent passing of legendary Coach Pat Summitt. Her passing due to Alzheimer's at the age of 64 was a great loss and it's hard to put into words how deeply she will be missed.

There is no doubt Pat Summitt made her mark on the game of women's basketball. For almost 40 years as the head coach she led the Lady Vols to 8 national championships, 31 consecutive NCAA tournaments, and amassed along the way a record of 1,098 wins.

I had the honor of meeting Pat Summitt a few times and she was always gracious and a class act. Her leadership on and off the court was truly inspiring. Her legacy will live on in her players and in the coaches who served alongside of her and through the work of her foundation.

I'd like to share with you a few of my favorite Pat Summitt quotes for your consideration and how they might be a source of inspiration for you.

"It's harder to stay on top than it is to make the climb. Continue to seek new goals."

"Success is a project that's always under construction."

"Here's how I am going to beat you. I'm going to outwork you. That's it. That's all there is to it."

"There is always someone better than you. Whatever it is that you do for a living, chances are, you will run into a situation in which you are not as talented as the person next to you. That's when being a competitor can make a difference in your fortunes."

"Teamwork is what makes common people capable of achieving uncommon results."

"You can't always be the most talented person in the room. But you can be the most competitive."

"If you don't want responsibility, don't sit in the big chair. To be successful, you must accept full responsibility."

"I'm someone who will push you beyond all reasonable limits. Someone who will ask you not to just fulfill your potential but to exceed it. Someone who will expect more from you than you may believe you are capable of."

"When a player makes a mistake, you always want to put them back in quickly -- you don't just berate them and sit them down with no chance of redemption."

"Quit? Quit? We keep score in life because it matters. It counts. Too many people opt out and never discover their own abilities, because they fear failure. They don't understand commitment. When you learn to keep fighting in the face of potential failure, it gives you a larger skill set to do what you want to do."

When reading her quotes you get a glimpse into what made her not only a great coach but a great mentor, friend, and inspiration to so many.

In honor of her legacy I'd like to encourage my readers who are so inclined in joining me in making a donation to The Pat Summitt Foundation. The foundation works in partnership with the University of Tennessee Medical Center for research in finding a cure for Alzheimer's. Visit the website at: <http://www.patsummitt.org/>

UNBEARABLE LIGHTNESS

By Portia de Rossi
Reviewed by Melyssa Jaskiewicz

When I told my husband I was reading Portia de Rossi's memoir, he responded with "Why would you want to read a book about some privileged rich girl?"

To be honest I had the book for over a year before I picked it up. I had seen it on the Ellen show and I love Ellen so I bought it. I then found myself staying up until midnight with a headlight on, reading in bed while everyone else in the house sleeps.

It's captivating – the demons inside this women, the light shed on an industry most of the world puts on a pedestal. It reminded me of what was told to me years ago, "You never really know what goes on when a person closes their bedroom door."

To hide who you are, to suppress your being, to pretend all the time, it must have been exhausting. It speaks to all women who strive to be perfect, showing that perfection and happiness are not related at all. At points in the book, she seems determined, strong, and disciplined. At others you see the real side of her, the darkness, the irrational destructive behavior.

VICTORY OVER JAPAN

By Ellen Gilchrist
Reviewed by Jennifer Carrigan

Books of short stories have been my go to as of late, reason being, I don't seem to have the attention span that I once had. I am going to chalk it up to a busy schedule with lots of balls in the air (definitely not a reflection of my age).

One of the things that I love about Ellen Gilchrist's books is that I find them just as entertaining at 50 as I did in my early 20s. She is an author who makes me laugh out loud, cry in my pillow and seethe at bad decisions some of her characters make.

In "Victory Over Japan", Gilchrist engages us immediately with rich and eccentric characters - her go to character is the "deliciously flawed Southern woman". Each of the 14 stories opens with a line that captures us immediately. For example "Rhoda was fourteen years old the summer her father dragged her off to Clay County, Kentucky, to make her stop smoking and acting like a movie star."

The best part about Ellen Gilchrist and "Victory Over Japan", is that if you enjoyed this book, she has written 13 other story collections and 8 novels that will keep you entertained for weeks to come!

GIRL A By Girl A Reviewed by Brittany Tait

"Girl A" is based on a true story about a witness who came forward to take down a sex trafficking ring throughout parts of England. The novel is a personal account of all that this young girl went through including being a victim of the ring and how she overcame her struggles after she went through the attack.

The book goes into many details of her life both past and present, however, to this day, her name has never been revealed. It is one part of her life that was not taken from her by the perpetrators and exploited by the media when sharing her story. While this non-fiction novel is hard to read at times due to the details, it is an extremely interesting story and restores hope that a justice system can punish those that do horrible things. I highly recommend this book to any true crime fan.

WARRIORS: INTO THE WILD

By Erin Hunter

Reviewed by Jack and Will Bearden, twin brothers age 10

Note: "Warriors: Into the Wild" is a children's fantasy novel that was published in 2003 by Harper Collins and written by Erin Hunter. "Into the Wild" is the first book of in a series of forty-four books. Following are head-to-head reviews of this title, with each brother sharing his own take on the story.

JACK'S REVIEW

This book begins with a pet named Rusty who has an urge to leave the safety of his home and go to the wild. The book is a story about cats and tribes and it is awesome. I have read this one, and almost all of the others in this series, and enjoyed them all.

The storyline starts off with a pet cat who is orange-furred and who lives in the Twoleg place, or the place of the humans. Behind the place of the people is a forest full of cat clans: Windclan, Shadowclan, Riverclan and, the best, Thunderclan. Rusty is the hero in the story, and Tigerclaw, who is part of Thunderclan and dislikes Rusty because of a secret between the two, is his rival.

Rusty meets Greypaw of Thunderclan in the woods and, after fighting together, Greypaw introduces himself. Then Bluestar, the leader of Thunderclan, appears and asks Rusty to join their clan because they need more warriors to fight against the other clans, to defend their territories, and have enough food to eat. Rusty is shocked, and heads back home where he realizes that he wants to be more than just a house pet. Rusty joins Thunderclan, who changes his name to Firepaw as a warrior apprentice. The struggles between the clan continue, and Rusty-now-Firepaw joins in the fight for food along with the other Thunderclan cats.

"What is especially thrilling about the book is how the authors blend the science of living in the low gravity Mars."

- Yvonne Michel comment about Leviathan Wakes

I really enjoyed the book; it was interesting and it's about cats, which I love. The purpose of the book was more about introducing the cats to the reader, but it's a great book for anyone about survival, adventure, and fantasy. I would highly recommend it to people who love cats, or any animals really, and enjoy a bit of mystery.

Oh, and by the way... the ending has a big surprise. But you'll have to read it to find out!

WILL'S REVIEW

This book is a cat book that's both exciting and addictive. The setting is in a forest called "White Heart Woods" with different clans of wild cats who live there. The main character is a former housecat named Rusty, later known as Firepaw.

Firepaw is caught by a Thunderclan patrol when he attempts to catch a mouse in their territory. He learns about their way of life and they ask him to join their clan. Rusty joins because he wants more of a life than his comfortable and easy living in a human home.

There are four clans that each have different strengths: Windclan is fast, Shadowclan is strong, Riverclan is smart, and Thunderclan is peaceful. The clans live behind the Two-leg place in the woods. Although all of the clans are rivals in the story, the main rival is a warrior in the clan that Firepaw joins, named TigerClaw. He is a smart and strong wildcat, and he does something bad and Firepaw catches him in the act.

The main reason I enjoyed this book was because of the characters and the conflict. The story was a bit confusing at times because some things weren't explained right away. Overall, though, I would recommend the book because it's intriguing and Firepaw is a character that a reader can love.

EVERYBODY'S FOOL

By Richard Russo

Reviewed Jo Ana Finger

Set in New Bath in upstate New York, "Everybody's Fool" by Richard Russo is the slightly whacky story of a small town that has never measured up to its classy and pricier neighbor, Schuyler Springs. The novel opens as Douglas Raymer,

Chief of Police, faints into the open grave of his nemesis, Judge Flatt. Filled with self doubt and perceived inadequacies since childhood, Raymer's ready to resign after a particularly trying day. Raymer's obsessed with discovering the identity of his dead wife's lover. When he finds a garage door opener that is not his, he is set to open every garage door in New Bath in order to learn the man's name despite the warnings of his sharp-tongued dispatcher, Charice Bond. Charice manages both Raymer and her elegant but neurotic brother, Jerome. Sully, Raymer's long time adversary and aging bad boy, is filled with regrets for the past and hobbled by congestive heart failure. His affair with a married woman defines his existence as does his love for the son he benignly neglected. Rub Squeers, Sully's bumbling but endearing companion, spends his days worrying that Sully is no longer his best friend. Then there's Carl Roebuck, whose shady business schemes are finally about to implode.

This novel about a struggling small town is filled with offbeat, flawed characters. Russo treats his subjects with compassion, honesty, and humor. "Everybody's Fool" takes an understanding look at human nature and is a really good read.

HUNT FOR THE BAMBOO RAT By Graham Salisbury

Reviewed Wyatt Stanley, age 13, rising eighth-grader at Christ Our King
"Hunt for the Bamboo Rat," by Graham Salisbury, is a historical fiction loosely based on an actual story of a Japanese American boy named Zenji during War World II. He was recruited by the U.S. Army Corps of Intelligence Police his senior year in high school to become an American spy in the Philippines after graduation. This story was exciting, as Zenji tried to gather information for America without getting caught by the Japanese. As the story unfolded, Zenji was finally captured and tortured by the Japanese secret police. However, he never revealed his true identity as the "Bamboo Rat" so his life was spared.

He then became a servant for a Japanese officer and secretly helped Filipino rebels escape Japanese prison camps. When the U.S. invaded the Philippines, Zenji escaped to the jungle where he fought to survive the natural elements and a physical injury.

This book was an exciting story about War World II and how a young American tried to survive and be brave for his country. Zenji loved America and was willing to sacrifice his own life to help America win the war. I would recommend this book to any middle schooler who enjoys history and survival stories.

LEVIATHAN WAKES

By S.A. Corey

Reviewed Yvonne Michel

A new SyFy series aired recently called "The Expanse", which was fantastic in both production value and story line. The series was based on the first book in a series by S. A. Corey, "Leviathan Wakes".

The New York Times called the book "a modern masterwork of science fiction where humanity has colonized the solar system." I greatly enjoyed the SyFy series and got the book it was based on. Seeing the film version in no way spoiled the reading of the book, so I say watch it then read it. S. A. Corey, the pen name of Daniel Abraham and writer Ty Franck, frame a compelling tale of compromised heroes racing to confront powerful, but corrupted foes as Earthers, Martians, and Belters contend for control of essential resources needed for living in the solar system.

What is especially thrilling about the book is how the authors blend the science of living in the low gravity Mars and the very low gravity of space station habitation into the narrative as people, all humans, expand life into space. Seeing ourselves in the not so very distant future, living large, but still prey to our instincts for group identity, power, greed, and human connection, is an intellectual exercise as well as pure entertainment.

THE HIRED GIRL

By Laura Amy Schlitz

Reviewed by Vijaya Bodach

"The Hired Girl" by Laura Amy Schlitz is the best fiction I've read this year and I read a lot. At the end of it one just wants to go back and read over. It's in a diary format and I can only wish to write so beautifully in mine! Yes, I found myself jealous of a fictional character -- Joan. She's based upon the author's grandmother. I loved that she had the gumption to run away from home (her father is a mean man who burns her three treasures) and go after the dream. And does she ever! She providentially ends up working in a good Jewish home. And since she knows not a whit about Jewish people other than the Bible and Ivanhoe, it is interesting to see her learning about Jewish customs from a Catholic viewpoint.

I liked that being religious was simply a part of who she was. The relationships with the various members of the family were richly drawn, and I especially loved the relationship between the older orthodox Jewish servant and Joan. And Joan, only 14 (but pretending to be 18) finally gets a bit of mothering and fathering that she is desperately in need of. This is a book I'll be reading many times. Ms. Schlitz, you've done it again! I've read all her books. Everything she writes is gold.

BETWEEN THE WORLD AND ME

By Ta-nehisi Coates

Reviewed by Anonymous

Reading "Between the World and Me" by Ta-nehisi Coates was very eye opening. I grew up learning about the Civil Rights Movement and thinking it was something that had come and gone once the wrongs were righted. I could hold onto this view because as a white person I hadn't ever experienced things to change it. During the recent years of political and social unrest I have had some good if uncomfortable talks with my African American friends. One thing I wasn't able to fully understand was the anger that was there. I thought "but I'm not racist" why would they seem angry when talking to me.

Coates eloquently and thoughtfully lays out why the anger is there. Why it isn't over sensitivity. Why everything is not alright. Here on Daniel Island we are in "the bubble." Let's use this place of privilege, not to hide from the world, but to make it better. It's not enough to personally be "not racist", we need to be anti-racist. Our neighbors deserve better. Our children deserve better.

FOR THE LOVE

By Jen Hatmaker

Reviewed by Deetz Hanna

Ladies, Jen Hatmaker is speaking our language. She is warm, funny, relatable... did I mention funny? This book will have you laughing until you cry as you think, "It's not just me?!?" Then, while you are laughing she'll slip in some challenge to the typical way of thinking, and you'll be like, "Wow, I hadn't thought of that, that way, but she has a point." It is a quick and thoroughly enjoyable read.

Hanahan's Seth Lancaster's big hit kept Coastal Carolina in the hunt for the College World Series Championship

PHILIP M. BOWMAN

Seth Lancaster spent a good portion of the 4th of July weekend driving from Omaha, Nebraska to Conway and then home to Hanahan.

The way the former Hanahan High School student-athlete talked, he could have just as well drifted home because he was still on Cloud 9.

Lancaster plays baseball for Coastal Carolina, and he plays it quite well. He was on the bench with a knee injury and couldn't play in the College World Series, an event Coastal won in dramatic fashion over highly favored Arizona.

Still, it's a thrill that will be with him forever.

"It's everything you dream of and then some," said Lancaster, who just completed his sophomore season in Conway. "It took a while to sink in, and, to be honest, it's still sinking in. But it was a great accomplishment by a great group of guys – my teammates."

Lancaster missed the best-of-3 CWS. But if it weren't for Lancaster, the Chanticleers just might have had to watch the College World Series from their couches at home.

The second baseman provided the big hit against North Carolina State in the Raleigh Regional. With his team down 5-3 heading into the final inning of the game, the Chants rallied but rain forced postponement until the following day.

Play resumed and the Chants cut the lead to 5-4. With the bases loaded and Coastal Carolina down to its last out, Lancaster hit a fastball to right field for a single to drive in two runs to give Coastal Carolina a 6-5 lead. Coastal won, 7-5.

"When I got the hit to extend the season, I remember what got us there," Lancaster said. "It took a lot of hard work. You get up at 5:30 (in the morning) practice, go to classes, study and practice some more -- behind the scenes things people don't even think about. But we did the work. We wanted to win."

Lancaster missed the College World Series when he injured his knee sliding into home plate in the Super Regional against LSU. He was safe on the play, but sidelined for approximately three months because of rehabilitation.

The good news was Lancaster was able to savor the pagentary that Omaha and the Series offered.

"I was raised to treat each day as a gift," Lancaster said. "I know nothing is guaranteed. I just saw the College World Series from a different perspective. I wouldn't change it for anything."

Lancaster, who was all-state at Hanahan, remembers watching USC win the College World Series and watching the Chants come up short in the Super Regional a few years back. It was his dream to make the trip to Omaha.

"I remember when Coastal hosted the Super Regional, but couldn't get the job done," Lancaster. "But I knew coach (Gary) Gilmore was a winner and could lead us there. He preached it, preached it and preached it."

The 6-1, 205-pound Lancaster played in 32 games as a freshman last spring. He batted .191 with a pair of doubles and a homer. He drove in 11 runs.

He stepped up this season after struggling early. He started in 57 of the team's 63 games and batted .326 with 11 doubles and seven home runs. He collected 35 RBI and 15 stolen bases.

With summer now in full swing, high temperatures and crowded waterways can make fishing a bit challenging. However, there is a good way to avoid both. Go fishing early in the morning or late in the evening. If you go in the evening, make sure to double check the weather radar (because lightning is not your friend).

Last week, Julian Levin joined me for a late afternoon fishing trip. Our plan was to fish top water lures during last half of the falling tide. While the sun was already low on the horizon, it was still pretty hot when we launched the skiff. The surface water temperature was 86 degrees. Given these conditions, we focused our efforts on shallow areas that were directly adjacent to deeper water.

I was casting (my favorite) Lucky Craft Sammy 100 and Julian was using a smaller profile Rebel Popper. The Trout had a definitive preference for the Rebel Popper. Undeterred, I continued casting my Lucky Craft. Here is a Pro Tip. When the other guy is catching way more fish than you, switch to the lure he are using! I failed to take my own advice. Subsequently, Julian had a great evening of top water fishing. Me, well I enjoyed his company.

You can beat the heat and the crowds by fishing early or late in the day. When Julian and I fished together, we only saw a few boats and the temperature was much more

Flying Fish splash past Crowfield, improve to 4-2

BEN DETAR

Coach Rose Van Metre and the Daniel Island Flying Fish found their toughest competition this week to be the Lowcountry weather. Tuesday night the Fish were scheduled to face the Newington Tiger-sharks in Summerville. But, because of a nasty storm that rolled through the area, many of the Flying Fish did not even have the chance to get off the island. The meet was canceled and rescheduled for a rain date (7/7).

Thursday night the Fish raced the Crowfield Killer Whales. The Killer Whales made the trek in the face of storm clouds and the weather held for most of the night. Besides a few raindrops, the clouds provided shade, a rare commodity at swim meets. The meet was hard won, the score within ten up until the individual medleys, the last events of the night.

The Fish moved ahead after some impressive freestyle relay swims from the 7-8 and 9-10 age groups. The final score was 293-244, with the Daniel Island Flying Fish improving their dual meet record to 4-2.

Daniel Island will close out the regular dual meet season, with the exception of the Newington make-up, on Tuesday at Dunes West. The Fish will take on the Swordfish in what promises to be a fun and exciting meet!

Every week the coaches meet and decide on swimmers of the week from each age group. These individuals exemplify what it means to be a Flying Fish. They are active in meets, cheering on their friends, and they are always at practice with a good attitude and a smile on their faces. This week's swimmers of the week are: 5-6 age group - Madeleine Whelan and Ethan Ortals, 7-8 age group - Megan Parkman and RJ Raup, 9-10 age group - Grace Ward and Nate Anderson, 11-12 age group Makayla Brunetti and Walsh Clarkin, 13-14 age group - Caroline Conway and Owen Conley, and 15-18 age group - Spencer Watts and Harrison Griffith. Congratulations swimmers!

Nate Anderson was one of the Swimmers of the Week in the 9-10 age group.

What was “Brexit” and why did it happen?

STEPHANIE W. MACKARA, JD

Brexit (short for “British Exit”) was the nickname given to the movement to persuade the British government to pull Britain out of the European Union (EU). A nationwide referendum — only the third in modern history in Britain — took place on June 23, 2016, and by a close vote of 52% to 48% British voters asked their government to negotiate a deal to leave the EU.

The idea of creating a single, common market across Europe began in the aftermath of World War II. A slow effort, but by 1993, a single market was created covering 28 countries. Borders were opened and visas for travel and work permits abolished. An important milestone was the development of the European Monetary Union in 1999 which, by 2002, had converted 19 of the 28 countries (defined as the “eurozone”) over to a single currency, the euro. Britain was a party to the EU, but it did not choose to participate in the eurozone, and thus preserved its use of its home currency, the pound.

While Britain, like most of the other EU countries, benefited economically from a common market, Britain has never been as comfortable with some of the political aspects of the EU. Long-term immigration trends and their recent acceleration under the EU have stoked strong nationalist feelings in Britain, leading to the political movement to exit the EU.

Markets don’t like to be surprised. For weeks polls (and other prediction markets, such as bookies) suggested that by a narrow margin voters would opt to keep the U.K. in the EU. When the opposite happened, global markets reacted negatively.

Unusual market events, such as the Brexit vote, are actually “normal,” but not necessarily frequent. Here’s what we know today: The “Brexit” will take two years, or more, to complete. A number of economically successful European countries, such as Switzerland and Norway, are not members of the EU. We cannot predict which countries will do well and which will not, nor which securities will benefit and which will decline. And despite what some prognosticators claim, no one knows exactly what the future holds in store. However, based on historical events, we believe that these kind of events eventually assimilate within a window of anywhere from 2 weeks to 6 months.

A few things to keep in mind:

1. This is a prime example of market efficiency in action. Well-functioning markets quickly assimilate new information into securities markets. Also, given the unprecedented nature of this event, new information will likely continue to be assimilated into securities markets as the U.K. negotiates the terms of their exit from the EU.

2. Patient investors who ride out such volatility events tend to experience higher long-term wealth accumulation than those who seek to predict and act upon the start or the end of such events. Given the efficiency of global financial markets, reacting to the events after they have occurred only ensures that a portfolio repeatedly “buys high and sells low.”

3. Rebalancing can make a difference. By rebalancing portfolios regularly, we strive to “buy low and sell high” as we focus on making sure each portfolio stays allocated to the desired long-term mix of stocks and bonds.

4. Great risk brings the potential for higher expected returns. While many commentators are focusing on the increased expected risks of investing in the U.K. and Europe, they are ignoring the potential for increased expected returns. When an investment’s risks rise, investors should expect the return potential to rise as well.

5. Political risks are not the same as investment risks. For example, the top performing global market over the last 10 years was the Philippines, which has experienced political turmoil as well as an active guerilla insurgency. On the other hand, a peaceful, stable country like Canada was all the way down at 30th in terms of performance.

Our advice in the face of such events is to take comfort in the longer run of history, which has faced far worse volatility aggravating events than this, including several recessions, stagflation, the Great Depression and two world wars; take time to reevaluate your personal risk tolerance and financial goals before making any changes to your portfolio.

Diversification neither assures a profit nor guarantees against loss in a declining market. All investing involves risk. Principal loss is possible. Charleston Investment Advisors is part of The Wealth Management Alliance LLC, a registered investment adviser. TW 16-008 (06/18)

Philip Simmons Middle School holds student assembly

New school is set to welcome students on the first day of this school year

Staff report

The Philip Simmons Middle School Student Assembly was held on Friday, May 20th, 2016. Future Philip Simmons Middle (PSM) students from both Cainhoy and Daniel Island Schools were invited to attend this event. There were over 175 students in attendance with the school projected to open with 200-250 on August 15, 2016 for students in grades 5th - 8th.

The purpose of the student assembly event was to excite and motivate all of our future students around the idea of starting a new year in a new school. We wanted to encourage all students to be engaged students at their new middle school. This assembly served as an opportunity for students to meet their future peers, teachers, and principal.

The assembly was hosted by local news personality, Tessa Spencer-Adams. Students were greeted by Principal Anthony S. Dixon, Berkeley County School District Superintendent Brenda Blackburn, and local pastors, parents, and community members Jon Gresh and Rev. Stephen Love. The theme of all

Lunch was provided by the BCSD Office of Child Nutrition. The Cainhoy Fire Department and Berkeley County Sheriff's office provided volunteers. The Philip Simmons PTSA volunteered, helped with planning, and also secured an abundance of donations to serve as raffle prizes for both students and teachers.

Principal Dixon said, "I am excited to serve as the principal of Philip Simmons Middle. Philip Simmons has such a rich and strong legacy; it is an honor to work in collaboration with our students, families, and communities, to create a school culture that is representative of Mr. Simmons' handwork, determination, and commitment to excellence. This was indeed a community effort bringing our new students together in order to ignite a fire within each and every one of them that will motivate them to forge a future of success as a Philip Simmons student."
