Phones down, eyes up

SC's hands-free driving law draws warnings now, but tickets and fines loom

EMMA SLAVEN
emma@thedanielislandnews.com

It's been one month since lawmakers told South Carolina drivers to hang up and put their phones down.

On Lowcountry roads, the shift is showing, as police have issued dozens of warnings, leaving plenty of drivers scrambling to adjust.

Since the Hands-Free and Distracted Driving Act took effect on Sept. 1, Charleston police have issued 36 warnings for violations citywide, with no particular age group standing out. For now, officers are limited to warnings during a 180-day grace period, but citations with fines and added points to licenses will begin Feb. 28, 2026.

"Distracted driving is not only dangerous but entirely preventable," said Sgt. Chris Stinson, public information officer for the Charleston Police Department. "Whatever is happening on your phone is not worth jeopardizing your life, the lives of your passengers, and everyone else on the road."

The law makes it illegal to hold or support a mobile device while driving. That includes texting, browsing apps, watching videos, or joining video calls. Drivers can use Bluetooth or mounted devices for navigation and calls, but phones must stay hands-free.

First offenses will carry a $100 fine, while repeat violations within three years will cost $200 and add two points to a driver's record. "There will most likely be an increase in citations once fines take effect," Stinson said.

Gov. Henry McMaster, who signed the bill in July, called it a long-overdue step.

"Distracted driving has claimed far too many lives and caused countless collisions across our state. (This) will significantly reduce the number of preventable accidents caused by distracted driving, ensuring more South Carolinians make it home safely to their loved ones."

The statistics are sobering. In 2023, 3,275 people nationwide were killed and more than 324,000 injured in distraction-related crashes, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. That's an average of nine deaths and 890 injuries due to distracted driving every single day. South Carolina became the 31st state to implement a hands-free law.

"There are life-and-death reasons to hang up the phone," said Rep. Bill Taylor of Aiken, South Carolina, who championed the legislation. "Just a few seconds can lead to tragedy. My hope is that distracted driving will soon be viewed the same way as drunk driving – reckless, dangerous, and utterly unacceptable."

For many drivers, the law has meant small adjustments. "I finally set up Bluetooth in my car after putting it off for years," said Daniel Island resident Sara Whitmore. "It's actually easier than I thought, and I'm glad South Carolina finally has this law in place, like many other states have had for years."

Others admit it's been harder.

SUZANNE DETAR

South Carolina's hands-free driving law went into effect on Sept. 1, making it illegal to hold or support a mobile device while driving. Drivers can use Bluetooth or mounted devices for navigation and calls, like the one on this dash, but phones must stay hands-free.

"I didn't realize how often I grabbed my phone at red lights," said Clements Ferry commuter Terry Wright. "Now that I can't, I'm noticing how wired-in that habit really was."

State leaders, including public safety director Robert Woods, say the effort is worth it.

"By requiring people to put their phones down and keep their eyes on the road, we are confident this law will prevent collisions and save lives."

Suspect poses as cash register repairman, flees with cash

ELIZABETH HORTON
news@thedanielislandnews.com

The following incidents were taken from the City of Charleston Police Department's crime reports within Team 5, which covers Daniel Island, Clements Ferry Road, and parts of Cainhoy, between Sept. 1-15.

BURGLARY

On Sept. 8, an officer responded to Waterline Street in reference to a burglary of a storage container located on an active construction site. The complainant, an employee of the construction firm, stated that five power tools were stolen. Missing items included three hammer drills and two bandsaws, with a total value of $850. Team 5 captured footage of the damaged locking mechanisms that were likely cut with an angle grinder or saw. While there are no security cameras on the site, police will review surveillance footage captured at the entrance of the property.

HIT-AND-RUN COLLISION

A collision was reported at the intersection of Jack Primus Road and Clements Ferry Road on Sept. 8. The victim advised that she was stopped at a red light on Clements Ferry when her vehicle was struck by an older model, white sedan. The suspect left the scene of the accident immediately. A witness who was operating heavy equipment near the scene of the accident approached and provided the license plate number of the vehicle that fled. A Department of Motor Vehicles query of the provided tag number revealed that it was registered to a SUV out of McClellanville. The responding officer conducted a Flock camera search of the license plate and traced it to an unregistered white sedan traveling on Clements Ferry Road after the accident. The victim positively identified it as the one that hit her vehicle. The investigation is ongoing.

THEFT FROM A BUILDING

A convenience store on Island Park Drive contacted Team 5 on Sept. 9 to report both self-checkout machines had been tampered with at the store. The exterior doors and the interior money drawers were opened, along with a damaged locking mechanism.

The store manager noted that the register funds were missing, totaling $480. Police reviewed security footage, and the manager recognized the suspect as someone who frequented the store. The suspect told a cashier he was there to service the checkout machine. The video showed the individual opening the machines and placing unknown items into a grocery bag before leaving the store. The case is pending.

DRIVING UNDER THE INFLUENCE

On Sept. 13, an officer responded to Clements Ferry Road after receiving multiple calls about a swerving vehicle. One witness stated that he was nearly struck by the vehicle, while another observed that the truck hit a guardrail. The vehicle was seen turning into an apartment complex and was found parked there, running with the lights on. The officer made contact with the driver and noticed that her speech was slurred, and she was unsteady on her feet. Damage to the vehicle, consistent with a 911 caller's description, was noted. A standard field sobriety test was issued. Police say the driver displayed multiple signs of impairment, admitted to drinking three beers, and other bottles of alcohol were found in the vehicle, sealed with blue painter's tape.

She was arrested for driving under the influence. The suspect was booked and lodged at Hill-Finklea Detention Center without incident.

How good are you at trying new things?

unconventional wisdom

STEVE FERBER

Fear? Pride? Embarrassment?

What prevents us from trying new things, from venturing into the unknown, the unfamiliar?

"Think about trying something new," says Dr. Juan Pablo Zapata, as quoted by Katherine Brooks, "as your daily dosage of a vaccine booster for mental health."

"Doing something new," maintains Jacqueline Hill in lifehack.org, "sharpens your focus (and) cognitive abilities and increases creativity," and can also open you up to "new emotions, experiences, and cultures."

Trying new things "stimulates our minds," say the authors at northridge.org, and "creates new neural pathways."

Mount Everest?

We're not talking about climbing Mount Everest or skydiving in Switzerland, though both sound life changing. We're talking about the positive impact from taking small steps, from leaving our comfort zones, our routine, the familiar.

It can be as simple as trying a new food, hiking a new trail, cooking a new recipe, attending a class, or traveling to a city you've never seen before. Learning to paint? Revisiting a childhood hobby? Growing lettuce in a garden? They all qualify.

THE BRAIN'S NOVELTY CENTER

Notes Brooks: "(Zapata) explains that there is a region in our midbrain called the substantia nigra/ventral segmental area, or SN/VTA…. It's the novelty center of the brain, which responds to new stimuli," and plays a role in both learning and memory.

Karyn Hall of Psychology Today adds that routine "can be so comforting, but the lack of novelty is limiting to our mental wellness."

A STUNNING LIST

Introducing Sally, who in 2018 initiated a personal challenge at challengefiftytwo.com to do 52 new things each year. Seven years later, she hasn't missed a beat – she's tried 376 new things (I've just read 'em all), and it's a stunning list.

Some are modest, others outlandish; each is new to her brain. A few of my favorites: played a harp, tried Pranayama (a breathing technique for relaxation), walked an alpaca, took a tufting class, went to work in a tuxedo, and attended a class on laughter yoga!

WHAT STANDS IN THE WAY?

"New adventures involve risk and uncertainty," notes Julie Rains in wisebread.com, who delineates the standard concerns of feeling incompetent, wasting one's time, paying too much, and ruining an experience for companions.

While acknowledging that fear is what slows us down ("it's okay to be scared"), Rain insists that trying new things can be "its own reward."

Ready to step outside? If so, a few tips:

1. Start small
2. If possible, find an accountability partner
3. Ask yourself these questions, courtesy of Tricia Park from isitrecessyet.com:

● "Have I tried this new thing in the past, and if so, do I believe or assume that it will be useless for me to try it again?

● "Is there a chance I don't really want to change how I behave or think?

●"Do I secretly hope that I'll fail at this new thing so I don't have to change? If so, is this helping me or preventing me from achieving my valued goals?"

Our final word comes from Michelle, a blogger at shelbeeontheedge.com: "I no longer allow fear to keep me from doing the things I want to do."

Ever feel like you're stuck in a well with a bull moose?

management moment

DOUG DICKERSON

Ever feel like you're stuck in a well with a bull moose?

"How do you identify someone who needs encouragement? That person is breathing. - S. Truett Cathy

The other week, a bull moose somehow managed to fall into an abandoned well in a forested area of Maine. A team worked for about five hours to free the animal, as initially the landowners thought it may have been a turkey or some other type of animal. Upon further inspection, it turned out to be much larger.

Using an excavator provided by the family, the animal was freed from the well, much to the relief of everyone. Once it was free, it took off running and perhaps had a bruised ego.

If you hang around in leadership long enough, it's not too far-fetched to know that sometimes we can end up in situations like the bull moose, or we know someone who is. And when those times come, what is a leader to do?

Consider these statistics:

– 56% of leaders experienced burnout in 2024, an increase from 52% in 2023, according to a report by Staffing Industry Analysts.

– 41% of senior leaders are stressed, and 36% are exhausted, per a 2022 Deloitte report.

– 42% of senior leaders attribute the top cause of their stress to their own self-imposed pressure.

– 41% of employees expressed having little confidence in their leaders' ability to support mental health, leading to a 'leadership gap," according to a Spring Health study.

Here are some practical considerations and reminders to keep in mind when you find yourself feeling trapped.

NO ONE IS IMMUNE TO FALLING

You know as well as I do that no one is immune to falling into the proverbial well from time to time. I have been there many times myself. Seasoned leaders and new ones alike today find themselves challenged like never before, and stress can be a constant friend. The well is a simple reminder that we are on a shared journey.

YOU ARE NOT ALONE

One of the greatest lies you can believe as a leader is that you are all alone. You may feel like you are stuck or have fallen into a well, feeling alone and unseen. Your struggle may be hard, you may feel overwhelmed, and you may even feel like giving up. But take heart, you are seen, your voice is heard, and you are not alone. You will emerge from this stronger and better equipped than before.

EVERYONE NEEDS ENCOURAGEMENT

We need each other. And everyone needs encouragement. I am thankful for the times when I was in the well that I had friends who were there to lift me up and out. And I am grateful and humbled by the times I have been there for others in similar situations.

The late comedian Robin Williams once said, "Everyone is fighting a battle you know nothing about. Be kind. Always." This is our commission as leaders.

Locally-owned Charleston Mahjong Club creates game tiles with a Lowcountry flair and style

MARIE ROCHA-TYGH
marie@thedanielislandnews.com

In the past few years, the ancient game of mahjong, a tile-based game requiring specific matching combinations to win, has seen a resurgence of popularity.

This is not your grandma's mahjong. With a large social following, the game is becoming a staple at bridal showers, girls' nights, and a favorite with Lowcountry locals.

Over a year ago, Daniel Island residents and business owners Meghann Caloudas, a mobile physical therapist; and Childs Thrasher, a local attorney, co-founded the Charleston Mahjong Club. Their company creates and designs mahjong tiles.

"My girlfriend and I were looking for mahjong tile sets when we first started learning, but we couldn't find any that really spoke to us," said Caloudas, a founding member of the Daniel Island Yacht Club. "I told her my ideas for a ski club tile and the yacht club tile."

After having fun designing tiles, they began making game sets. With the help of graphic designer Rachel Wilson, the Charleston Mahjong Club was born.

"We focus on providing tile sets and accessories required for the game of mahjong," Thrasher said. "We have over 180 mahjong instructors across the country who teach and hold events with our tiles. It's a great way to meet people. The mahjong community is a wonderful and supportive group."

Jessica Young of Young Children's Charities became involved with the Charleston Mahjong Club a year ago.

"We did a mahjong event for our charity. They came with their sets and displayed them. I loved working with them; they are both the sweetest!" she said. "My first set I purchased from them, The Country Club line, is my favorite! The quality of their tiles is impeccable and so cute."

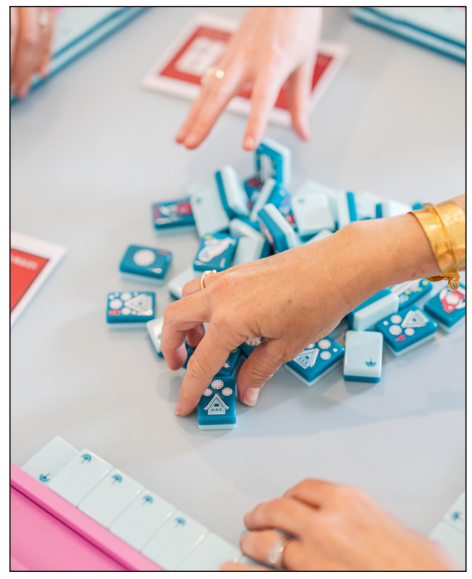

Kristin Gee of MahjonGee and the Mount Pleasant Mahjong Club learned to play on a girls' trip. She fell in love with mahjong.

"I began teaching friends and neighbors, simply so I'd have people to play with. This hobby turned into a side gig and later became the main gig," Gee said. "I'm thrilled to partner with Charleston Mahjong Club to promote their tiles and brand. We have an exciting launch party for a new tile set in the works."

Cindy Jones has been playing mahjong for eight years and loves sharing her knowledge of the game and teaching others. As an ambassador for the Charleston Mahjong Club, she is passionate about promoting mahjong and their custom tiles.

"The whole game is about the tiles," Jones said. "The weight of the tile, the clicking of the tile, holding it, flipping… The Charleston Mahjong Club has amazing tiles. Not only are they beautiful, (but they) also represent Daniel Island and Charleston. I love the colors and effervescence of the tiles. When you hear them clicking, when you're mixing them up, it's a beautiful feel."

Tiles, game sets, and accessories are sold at The Happy Southerner in Mount Pleasant and Madison Miller Decor on Johns Island. They will be available at Anthropology starting in October. Check out their social media pages and charlestonmahjongclub.com.

Leaders weigh options as parking lot slated for development

emma@thedanielislandnews.com

For years, the sandy lot at the end of the Daniel Island Waterfront near the walking trails, restaurants, and splash park has been more than just an empty space; it's been a vehicle lifeline.

Whether grabbing dinner at The Kingstide, catching an acoustic set during the fall music series, or joining the crowd for Bark in the Park, residents and visitors have relied on the unofficial waterfront "parking lot" as the only convenient place to leave their cars.

But its days may be numbered.

"The parcel of land that is currently being used for parking at The Waterfront has always been slated for development, dating back to the original master plan for Daniel Island that was established in the early 1990s," said Jamie Gnazzo, account director for East West Partners, the lead developer of the adjacent Waterfront Daniel Island residential complex.

Not to be confused with Daniel Island's Waterfront Park, The Waterfront Daniel Island is a 22-acre residential community of condominiums, apartments, and townhomes that sits beside the park along the Wando River.

The project is being built in phases; Phase IV, which broke ground earlier this year, includes 128 rental units in two buildings called Marin at The Waterfront. The sandy lot used for parking is not part of Phase IV, but its future remains unclear.

"At this time, there is no further information to share on potential construction or timelines for master plan development at The Waterfront Daniel Island beyond Phase IV," Gnazzo said. "While it will ultimately be developed as part of the community, it is currently permitted for construction use only."

NICK WOOD

Future development of this 1.38 sandy-acre lot located at the Daniel Island Waterfront lot may limit parking for people who visit the nearby trails, restaurants, and fishing dock.

That uncertainty is troubling for area residents, according to Berkeley County Councilman Jarrod Brooks, who represents Daniel Island. He said he is in active talks with the City of Charleston Mayor William Cogswell and City Councilmen Boyd Gregg and Mike Seekings to ensure that parking, or at least some form of public access, remains part of the plan.

"Everybody at the city (of Charleston) is aware of the opportunity there," Brooks said. "They're aware of what it could potentially mean to the waterfront of Daniel Island."

The biggest issue? Parking.

Brooks has heard firsthand from older residents who said they would stop coming to the waterfront if they had to park blocks away. "Availability of parking and that proximity means a lot, especially to our older residents," he said.

As far as what's to come, Brooks said he's heard discussions of a hotel replacing the lot, though he stressed it's only speculation at this point. "As far as I've heard, it's scheduled to be a hotel, but that's just all hearsay."

He laid out a few options on the table: encouraging the developer to build public parking into any new structure, or exploring whether groups like the Daniel Island Community Association or Daniel Island Park Association, or even the City of Charleston, could purchase the land to preserve access.

"Local leaders understand the importance of continued, easy access to the Daniel Island waterfront," Brooks said. "There is alignment among city and county officials about what we'd like to see, and we are in dialogue with the developer to see what the options may be that are of mutual benefit."

If the 1.38-acre lot is developed, visitors may be forced to rely on limited spots along River Landing Drive or park a half mile away or more in other island shopping centers.

"When you show up to an event at the Waterfront, that entire lot is completely full. Between park goers, event goers, and boaters, that property means a lot to several different constituencies," Brooks said.

Bay Sheehan, communications coordinator for the City of Charleston, said, "The city does not know of plans for future use of this space, and we have not signed off on any development plans."

"I think it really comes down to what is the pleasure of the developer and how much they want to work with the neighborhood to preserve access." Brooks said. "Again, there are a lot of moving parts, and they haven't quite all fallen into place yet."

ISLAND REAL ESTATE SPECIALIST

Edie Coupe REALTOR

DANIEL ISLAND,
SULLIVAN'S ISLAND, ISLE OF PALMS

We are writing to express how pleased we are with Ms. Edie Coupe who was so helpful in the purchase of our Daniel Island home. We arrived in SC having just moved here from CA. We had sold our CA home and told Ms. Coupe that we wanted to rent for six months, but wanted to know about Daniel Island and see some homes just to get an idea of what was available. Ms. Coupe, displayed extensive knowledge of Daniel Island and showed us homes we asked to see. Little by little, we realized we love everything about the island and told Ms. Coupe we were interested in buying a home. Mike and I are very happy with our new home and much of that is due to the diligence, professionalism and integrity of Ms. Coupe. Her organizational skills, people skills and understanding of the market and our needs was outstanding during the entire process. Ms. Coupe is certainly an exemplary realtor. Without hesitation, we would highly recommend Ms. Coupe to others.

Sincerely,

Teacher by day, musician by night: The double life of Eric Hatcher

EMMA SLAVEN
emma@thedanielislandnews.com

The first notes of a blues riff ripple through the Indigo Reef Brewing Co. off Clements Ferry Road, and Eric Hatcher leans into the microphone as if he's been doing this forever, which, in a way, he has.

By day, he educates students through the twists of history at Philip Simmons High School. By night, he transforms into a musician who lives for the stage.

"I've been singing and playing music my whole life," Hatcher said. "I picked up my first guitar around 15, and I was instantly hooked. I started playing professionally at 17, and I've been doing it ever since."

Music came first, but teaching eventually found him, unexpectedly.

"I took a very unlikely route to becoming a teacher," Hatcher said. "I dropped out of high school early in my sophomore year. I was smart enough but absolutely hated being at school. After working in the car business for over 15 years, I ended up marrying a teacher. Through her, I developed an interest in working with young people and started my path toward teaching, and now I'm in my 13th year."

Motivated to give students a better experience than he had, Hatcher joined Philip Simmons High School when it opened in 2017 and hasn't looked back. "I absolutely love our school and our community," he said.

Over the years, Hatcher has played in various Charleston venues, from The Windjammer on the Isle of Palms to The Pour House on James Island, and continues a 17-year collaboration with local singer-songwriter Matt MacKelcan. Together, they've even performed at the Credit One Charleston Open on Daniel Island.

More recently, Hatcher has been doing solo shows at Indigo Reef.

"I love any kind of music that has roots to it and feeling," he said. "I fronted a blues band when I was younger back in my hometown of Portland, Oregon, and I still have a love for blues music. I also love classic rock, soul, and country. My earliest influences were all guitarists such as Eric Clapton, Jimi Hendrix, and Stevie Ray Vaughan, to name a few."

Although Hatcher's music and teaching career developed separately, they inform one another.

"I do think teaching in front of 30 high school students is easier for me because I've spent so much time on stage over the years," he said.

Still, he keeps the two worlds distinct.

"I try not to discuss my music with my students. I like for them to just think of me as their teacher. I do like talking about guitar with students who play, though."

His advice for aspiring musicians or teachers?

"There are many versions of success in the music industry, and almost none involve 'making it big.'" Hatcher said. "I've had so many amazing experiences, and that in itself is success for me. Just enjoy the moment. For aspiring teachers, make sure students are the focus, because that is our purpose and the reason we do what we do."

Palmetto Freedom Fest honors military, first responders with concert

emma@thedanielislandnews.com

When country music star Lee Brice takes the stage on Daniel Island this November, it won't just be another concert. It will be a party with a purpose.

The 4th Annual Palmetto Freedom Fest returns Friday, Nov. 7, on the Grand Lawn at Credit One Stadium. Organized by Folds of Honor board member Eric Timko, the event blends live music, community, and patriotism, all while raising scholarship funds for South Carolina families of fallen or disabled military members and first responders.

"We want and expect our guests to experience an incredible night of patriotism that celebrates the sacrifices made by our military, first responders and their families," Timko said. "We have some surprises in store for this year with two new opening acts that will not disappoint and then of course, Lee Brice and his band will bring a helluva party to Daniel Island."

Brice, now a fixture of the festival, was an easy choice to headline.

"Lee is back by popular demand from both our past guests and from Lee himself," Timko said. "Lee has been an incredible supporter of Folds of Honor for more than the 12 years we have known him and his passion to give back and support our Folds families is incredible."

This year's fundraising goal is ambitious: $500,000, which Timko said could directly impact about 100 South Carolina families. Last year, more than 7,700 qualified Folds applicants nationwide went unfunded simply due to lack of resources.

"It means that our Folds families will be able to educate their children or spouses through the incredible generosity we receive at the Palmetto Freedom Fest and our other events throughout the year," he said.

Since its inception, the festival has raised more than $1.6 million and funded 478 scholarships for local families. If this year's goal is met, it will surpass the $2 million milestone. But Timko describes the event as much more than a fundraiser.

PHOTOS PROVIDED BY ERIC TIMKO

Gather on the Grand Lawn at Credit One Stadium on Friday, Nov. 7, for the Palmetto Freedom Fest, a night of live music and heartfelt tributes, all to honor local heroes and support the Folds of Honor nonprofit organization.

"We call it a huge 'Party with a Purpose.' Powerful stories of loss that through the generosity of others become incredible stories of hope and resilience," he said.

Alongside the music, guests can also participate in a Harley-Davidson motorcycle raffle, featuring a custom 1975 Shovel Head bike and trailer, with proceeds going to Folds of Honor Palmetto State. Food and beverages will be available on the Grand Lawn.

About 50 Charleston-area military members and first responders will also be honored at the event, alongside scholarship recipients eager to share their stories.

For Timko, watching the community rally each year moves him deeply. "We have created a movement and will continue to do so for many years to come," he said. "Our hope is that when Lee closes it down, our crowd leaves so energized that they feel the impact their generosity has provided our SC Folds families."

Palmetto Freedom Fest tickets and raffle entries are available now at palmettofreedomfest.org.

Bishops' showdown against Hilton Head could pave path to region title

PHILIP M. BOWMAN
sports@thedanielislandnews.com

The Bishop England High School football team passed the non-region part of its schedule with flying colors, including a 52-6 victory over Woodland High School on Sept. 26 at Jack Cantey Stadium.

The smackdown gave the Bishops a 5-0 record and some impressive numbers on both sides of the ball, an indication they are winning the battle upfront. The high-octane offense is averaging 47.8 points a contest, while the stingy defense is allowing only 7.0 points per game.

Bishop England football coach Logan Hall was asked to give his team a midterm grade.

"The grade would be B+," Hall said. "We have the potential to be a great football team by cleaning up some execution errors. We will find out how good we are when we hit region play. A lot of talent and well- coached football teams."

The Bishops didn't savor this victory when they stepped out on the practice field to prepare for a Region 6-AAAA showdown at Hilton Head on Oct. 3.

While the Bishops are just beginning region play, the battle against the Seahawks could go a long way in determining the league's champion.

The Bishops and Seahawks finished 1-2 in the conference standings last season, and this year's title could go to the winner of this game. The Bishops defeated Hilton Head 21-7 last year to claim the championship. Hilton Head enters the game with a 5-1 record, including 1-0 in region play. The Seahawks are coming off a victory over Bluffton High.

"Hilton Head is very well coached, very disciplined," Hall said. "It should be a great football game. They are creative on both sides of the ball and have some great talent. It should be a great test to see where we are as a program."

Once again, the Bishops used big plays on offense and a suffocating defense to dispose of Woodland.

The Bishops gained 375 yards in total offense, and quarterback Quinn Mahoney and running back Brody Tonon accumulated most of the yardage.

Mahoney, who was selected to play in the Touchstone Energy Bowl Game in December, passed for 191 yards and four touchdowns, completing 11 of 20 passing attempts.

Senior Ben Turner was on the receiving end of four passes for 90 yards. He scored two touchdowns. The always reliable Zach Balog caught three passes for 48 yards and two scores.

Brody Tonon, the oldest of three Tonon brothers on the Bishops' roster, continues to impress as the season progresses. He needed only seven rushes to gain 102 yards and score a TD. He also caught two passes for 32 yards and a score.

Tonon, a 195-pound senior, has carried 36 times for 332 yards and averages almost 10 yards per carry. He totaled 111 yards and two touchdowns on only six catches.

Tonon also plays defense, as do his brothers, Chase and Trevor. The trio are known as the "Killer T's."

Trevor and Chase are twins and teamed up for some pretty impressive numbers against the Wolverines.

Trevor, a 6-1, 205-pound middle linebacker, tallied 14 tackles, including 10 solo stops. Chase, a 6-1 free safety, logged 12 tackles, blocked a punt, and was in on a QB sack.

Iron Horse kicker Falotico, Bishop QB Mahoney tapped as all-stars

PHILIP M. BOWMAN
sports@thedanielislandnews.com

Philip Simmons High School's C.J. Falotico has proven over the past two seasons that he is one of the elite kickers at the high school level in the Palmetto State.

The senior has a good work ethic, talent, steely nerves, and, perhaps, what kickers need most when things go awry, a short memory.

The senior is having a season to remember. He handles all the kicking duties for coach Eric Bendig's squad and has been nearly flawless for the Iron Horses. His effort, talent, and accomplishments earned him a spot on the South's roster for the 78th Touchstone Energy Bowl on Dec. 13.

The all-star showcase, formerly known as the North-South All-Star Football Game, will be held at Myrtle Beach's Doug Shaw Stadium.

Falotico will be joined by Bishop England quarterback Quinn Mahoney on the South roster. Mahoney is having a solid season and is a big reason why the Bishops are 5-0 this fall.

Mahoney transferred from Oceanside Collegiate to Bishop England in time for the 2024 season, and he arrived as a man without a position. Would he play wide receiver? Special teams? In the defensive secondary? Or, simply sit on the bench?

Mahoney was diligent in the weight room. He worked with the receivers on passing routes and timing in the offseason. He studied in the classroom, which has translated into a career that has yielded a scholarship to Campbell University, prestige, and a 14-3 record as the starting QB entering a Region 6-AAAA game at Hilton Head High School on Oct. 3.

Bendig knows that special teams play is one-third of a football game, and Falotico's powerful leg gives the Iron Horses an advantage in that phase of the game.

"He handles everything," Bendig said. "We don't punt very often, but he gets the job done there too."

Falotico is averaging 34.8 yards per punt with a long of 46 yards.

But kickoffs are where Falotico shines most.

Last year, he kicked off 75 times and 14 resulted in touchbacks. This fall, thanks to the work in the weight room, he's kicked off 31 times and has recorded 20 touchbacks in only five games.

Falotico has nailed 20 of 22 PAT attempts in 2025 and is 60 of 66 in his two years of handling the kicking duties. He's 11 of 14 in field goal attempts in two seasons with a long of 51 yards last season. He enters the Oct. 3 Region 6-AA opener against Woodland High School with 99 career points.

Mahoney, like Falotico, has impressive numbers at Bishop England.

Last fall, he earned all-region honors and became leader and fan favorite, earning the nickname "Red Rifle" for his strong arm.

His statistics for this season are impressive despite his limited playing time in lopsided victories. He's 63 of 103 in passing completions for 996 yards and 12 TDs, while amassing 154 yards and six touchdowns rushing.

In his 17 starts, Mahoney has accounted for 50 touchdowns and 4,180 yards in total offense. He is 232 of 408 passing for 3,457 yards and 35 scoring strikes.

Iron Horses rebound from slow start, now eye championship season

PHILIP M. BOWMAN
sports@thedanielislandnews.com

Philip Simmons High School's Hayes Goddard won a spirited battle for the starting quarterback job during spring practice. His football resume, at the time, included only 12 pass attempts with six receptions for 46 yards and a score.

What impressed coach Eric Bendig most were Goddard's intangibles.

"His leadership and grasp of our offense is what stands out," Bendig said when he named the 5-foot 10-inch, 160-pound junior the starting quarterback.

Goddard and the rest of his teammates struggled the first two weeks of the season after earning a spot in the South Carolina media poll's top 10 preseason poll. The Iron Horses started the 2025 campaign with losses to Hanahan and Lucy Beckham.

But Goddard and the Iron Horses have rebounded with three consecutive victories to re-enter the top 10 and have established themselves as a contender for the Region 6-AA championship.

"We're still working on accuracy," Bendig said of Goddard, who has completed 49 percent of his passes. "He works hard in the weight room, watches film, and wants to get better."

The Iron Horses, who are coming off a bye, begin region play this weekend, hosting Woodland High School at The Phil. The Wolverines, who own a 3-2 record, will face a quarterback who has improved every week.

Goddard enters the game with 54 completions in 111 attempts for 760 yards and nine TDs. The stat that really pleases Bendig the most is Goddard's zero in the interception category.

"He is more comfortable out there," Bendig said of Goddard's progression. "Sometimes, there is more pressure on the quarterback because he is asked to do so much, but he's responded."

Goddard is coming off what was arguably the best performance of the season in a 46-14 conquest of Whale Branch on Sept. 26. The Iron Horses built a 36-0 halftime lead, and Bendig was able to give his backups plenty of playing time. Goddard completed 19 of 28 passing attempts for 251 yards and four touchdowns.

His top targets in the victory were classmates Ashton Kellermann and Patrick Clarke. Kellermann snagged eight passes for 137 yards and a pair of scores, while Clarke caught five passes for 79 yards and two TDs. Both receivers and Goddard are in the PSHS Class of 2027.

Clarke, who is coming off the best game of his career, has eight receptions this fall for 137 yards and two scores.

Kellermann leads a talented wide receiver/tight end room with 26 receptions for 451 yards and five touchdowns.

"He's old-school, talented, and a hard worker." Bendig said of Kellerman. "Obviously, he can play other positions because he is so versatile. If he continues to progress, he will be one of the top wide receivers in the Lowcountry and state."

There's more young talent in the WR/tight end room. Junior wideout Blake Johnson has good speed, while sophomore Maurico Curry has made a successful transition from QB to wideout. Junior tight end Alex Tchoryk is an impressive target at 6-3 who is fundamentally sound.

PROVIDED BY PSHS

The Philip Simmons High School football team has won three straight games, after losing its first two, and now look to be a region championship contender. From right to left, Cruz Turner, Will Hollifield, Montrell Mungin, Ashton Kellermann, Hayes Goddard, Patrick Clarke, Alex Tchoryk, Blake Johnson, and Maurico Curry.

Nick Milano wins $50 gift card defeating Brannon Florie of Coach's Canteen

NICK MILANO

Nick Milano cruised to victory in Week 7, picking 10 of the 12 winners in this week's Pigskin Pick 'Em challenge, defeating VIP sponsor Brannon Florie of Coach's Canteen, who went 8-4.

"What an honor!" Milano said via email. "This ranks just behind my wedding day, the birth of my kids, and Ohio State's recent national championship as the happiest moments of my life."

As a transplant from the state of Ohio," , Nick, with his wife, Dana, and their two children, has called the Lowcountry home for more than a decade. "I'm originally from Cleveland but have lived in Charleston for 11 years," Milano said. "No better place to raise a family."

Nick outwitted the pool of online contestants and earned a $50 gift card to Coach's Canteen in Point Hope. He's now contemplating back-to-back wins. "I might need to retire," he joked. "It's good to give the little guys from places like Indiana a chance sometimes."

GREG PERALTA

Capt. Greg fishes solo while his dog pal Brody boots, scoots, and boogies

In October, fishing and catching are usually synonymous. Fishing is so easy that Brody, the amazing fish-finding and stock-trading dog, is planning to take most of the month off. While the value of my stock portfolio will most assuredly decline, I am pretty confident that I will still catch fish.

October fishing is just that good.

During his time off, Brody wants to learn to line dance. So, he jumped on a plane to Nashville, Tennessee, and left me alone for a few days. I wonder if he will buy two pairs of boots and a hat. I'll keep track of his social media and let you know.

Upon returning from dropping Brody at the airport, low tide was approaching. I decided to jump in the skiff and go fishing. The weather was perfect: light wind and sunny. Very comfortable. A great day for a boat ride.

So, I ran the skiff up the Wando River past the Highway 41 bridge. Without Brody on board, I wondered where to fish. After a bit of pondering, I decided on a small creek that I haven't fished in for years.

Upon arrival at the creek, I remembered why I had not fished there in years. It is super shallow and very difficult to navigate.

Thankfully, I was not stuck for very long and was able to pole the skiff into position. I cast a Z-Man StreakZ 3.75 on a 1/8-ounce Finesse Jig in front of a good-sized redfish. It shot forward and crushed the lure. After a short fight, I took a quick picture and released the fish.

For the next hour, it was cast, catch, and release. Fishing and catching were synonymous!

On the ride back to the dock, I thought about Brody in Nashville. Four boots and a cowboy hat. The mental image made me laugh.

Mahi-mahi: The impressive feats of the other 'flying fish'

Have you ever seen a flying fish?

Flying is a bit of a misnomer. They are really gliding, but when a fish over a foot long shoots out of the water at over 30 miles per hour and glides through the air for up to 600 yards, what's the difference?

But there is another fish frequenting the warm waters off our coast that is, to me, equally impressive in the air, far more striking and colorful, and a lot more exciting on a dinner plate. Its savage attacks on baits, feisty strength, and frequent jumps are legendary. Meet the other flying fish: Coryphaena hippurus, more commonly known as the dolphinfish, dorado, or mahi-mahi.

This piece isn't about fishing but about a species that this author has pursued, savored, and marveled at since elementary school. Marlin, sailfish, tuna, and wahoo are all exciting to catch and are major targets for Charleston's deep-sea fleet. But if many of us fishermen could only catch one species for the rest of our lives, the mahi-mahi would be the first choice.

The life of a dolphinfish is comprised of four major activities: eating, growing, migrating, and reproducing.

An article in Sport Fishing magazine states that a six-month-old mahi-mahi will be between 19 and 28 inches long, increasing to 23 to 55 inches at one year, and to 31 to 55 inches at two years. The weight at two years can exceed 50 pounds. That's a good thing for dorado fans, because 98% of these fish live less than two years, and their maximum life span is only about four years.

Mahi-mahi eat nearly nonstop and will eat almost anything that swims. Unfortunately for them, they are not only delicious to humans but are pursued relentlessly as food themselves. Many other species rely heavily on them, especially when they are small. I watched helplessly just a couple of years ago as a hungry blue marlin devoured the dolphinfish I had gotten almost to the boat.

Mahi-mahi are found in most warm-water areas and travel many miles in their very short lives, typically using warm currents like the Gulf Stream.

According to the Dolphin Research Program, a dolphinfish tagged off of Charleston in 2005 was recovered near the Azores, 2,500 miles away, only eight months later. Another DRP-tagged dorado traveled from the Florida Keys to Oregon Inlet, North Carolina, in nine days.

That's a staggering 93 miles per day!

Whether marveling at their airborne acrobatics, being wowed by their vibrant colors, or savoring that delectable meat, there is much to appreciate about the mahi-mahi.

Like professional athletes and rock stars, dorados live life at full throttle, eating voraciously and growing at incredible rates. They generally reach four feet in length in their first year of life and may ultimately reach up to 80 pounds in weight. These prolific travelers can cover nearly one hundred miles in a day.

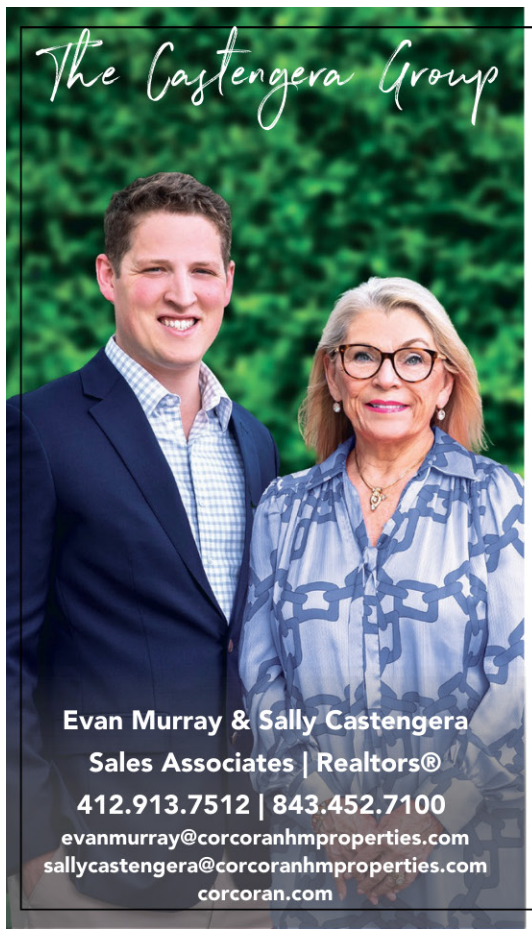

They take great exception to being pulled in by fishermen and express much of their displeasure in the air.

Finally, their qualities as table fare ensure them a permanent welcome to any menu, whether in some angler's home or in the finest restaurants in Charleston.

PROVIDED BY FRANK CONWAY

The frequent jumps of the mahi-mahi can be legendary, rivaling even the ocean's famous flying fish.
