Hometown heroine Rogers eliminated from play early

PHILIP M. BOWMAN
sports@thedanielislandnews.com

It was a script that was almost too good to be true.

The Credit One Charleston Open, formerly known as the Family Circle Cup and then the Volvo Car Open, returned in style to celebrate the historic tournament's 50 years of play Monday. For the first time since 2019, fans were in attendance as competition in the main draw began. The tournament was canceled in 2020 because of COVID-19 and last year the event was played without fans in attendance.

And if you were a fan on Monday, you had to be impressed with the $50 million renovation of Credit One Stadium, which went from something reminiscent of a giant erector set into a tennis Taj Mahal.

The weather was so delightful Monday that you wondered if the tennis gods bribed Mother Nature, or at least the local weatherman. The play was top-notch as well, highlighted by victories from Ukrainians Anhelina Kalinina and Katarina Zavatska.

But the script was to save the best for last. A ribbon cutting ceremony for the new

"It's not how many times you fall, it's how many times you get back up." - Shelby Rogers surroundings kicked off the night session, which featured hometown heroine Shelby Rogers, who faced Kaia Kanepi in the first Monday night session in the new stadium's history.

Rogers labored early, finally cashing in on one of eight set-point opportunities to claim the first set. She led 5-4 in the second set, but almost went down for the count when she fell hard on the green clay on an attempted return shot.

Rogers took a medical timeout, went to the locker room and returned to rousing applause. But the energy Rogers worked so hard to create didn't return and the 36-year-old Kanepi grinded out a 6-7(2), 7-5, 6-2 victory in a match that lasted three hours.

"Definitely not the outcome I wanted tonight," said the 28-year-old Rogers, who entered the tournament at World No. 44. "I guess I have to say a cliché: 'It's not how many times you fall, it's how many times you get back up.'"

It was good to be home with fans, said Rogers, who was first connected to the tournament 21 years ago when she was an 8-year-old ball girl.

"When you walk out on court and hear fans (chanting) my name, it's really special," Rogers added. "You can always learn from your losses, even ones like tonight."

The effervescent Rogers displayed a whole range of emotions during the late-night post-match interview. She smiled, laughed and even talked about her cuts, and bumps and bruises she suffered in her third career meeting against Kanepi.

Rogers wiped away tears when she recounted past tournament experiences in Charleston, whether they were stunning victories or double-bagel losses. She even looked to the future, including one last stop in the U.S. before heading to Europe for the clay-court season, which concludes with The French Open and the red clay of Roland Garros.

Rogers will play for Team USA in the Billie Jean King Cup, which will be contested against Ukraine, April 15-16 in Asheville, N.C.

Shelby Rogers led 5-4 in the second set, but ended up losing to Estonia's Kaia Kanepi in the match that lasted three hours Monday night.

On Saturday, April 2, the Credit One Charleston Open personnel rededicated the Althea Gibson Club Court to its late namesake. Gibson, born in Clarendon County, was the first Black tennis player to win a Grand Slam and was the first Black player to compete in Wimbledon. In total, Gibson won 11 Grand Slam titles and was a consistently ranked top-10 player. The rededication, in the form of a new South Carolina State House Resolution, was presented to Gibson's family by Rep. Wendell Gilliard and Charleston Tennis President and Tournament Director Bob Moran.

On Monday, April 4, as a prelude to the first night matches of the Main Draw, a ribbon cutting ceremony was held on Stadium Court. Tournament emcee and host Andrew Krasny gave an introduction, followed by remarks from Tournament Director Bob Moran and Credit One Bank's Senior Manager for Marketing and Sponsorships, Michael Norris. Moran and Norris were assisted with the ribbon cutting by ball girls Kaia Reiter and Lila Small, who held the ribbon. The $50 million plus renovations include a 60,000-square-foot stadium with an 11,500 seating capacity, fully conditioned permanent hospitality suites with access to private patios, kitchens, bathrooms and a Stage House which hosts player wellness facilities, media and back-of-house operations, as well as a VIP Club. Charity pro-am raises $100K for Ukraine relief efforts

marie@thedanielislandnews.com

On a beautiful, bright Sunday morning, Ukrainian flags were proudly on display around the practice courts at the Credit One Charleston Open. Players from the tournament, local tennis enthusiasts, along with Tennis Hall of Famers teamed up on April 3, to raise money for relief efforts in Ukraine.

In under two hours, $100,000 was raised for “Tennis Plays for Peace.” The Women’s Tennis Association-sponsored charity is an initiative that brings the tennis community and fans together to support humanitarian relief efforts for the war in Ukraine. Everyone was a winner.

The tennis pro-am gave 24 local club-level players the opportunity to compete with WTA players in a charity doubles tournament. The participants pledged $50,000 for charity. The tournament matched the funds raised from the event with another $50,000.

Tournament Director Bob Moran opened the tournament by talking about the significance of the event for the tennis community. “This is really important to us as a tournament and it’s really important to the players,” he said, then giving a special shoutout to Ben Navarro. “You’ve seen the facilities and the investment Ben and the family are making in this event. As soon as I said, ‘Hey I want to do something for Ukraine relief,’ it was a real easy ask. Ben was 100 percent supportive.”

The club level players were thrilled to be playing alongside the women and helping support the Ukrainian people. Lowcountry local Pam Marino had a great time competing in the WTA event.

“In tennis, we have fun amongst our rivals,” Marino said. “Today, we all came together for the benefit of Ukraine.”

tennis pro, Louis Skpowski, was excited to come out to support a worthy cause and have some fun as well. His wife, Toni, and daughter, Soleil, came to the event to cheer him on as he made a difference doing what he loves. Louis credited the community as an important part of making the pro-am happen.

“This is what makes the Lowcountry, Daniel Island, and Charleston happy, I love it,” Louis said. “The event speaks for itself – $100,000 overnight. Bada bing!”

Madison Keys, the 2019 tournament champion, and the Lowcountry’s own Shelby Rogers rallied alongside their fellow players to show their support of Ukraine and cement solidarity with the players. Ukrainian players Nadiia Kichenok, Lyudmyla Kichenok, and Anhelina Kalinina and Katarina Zavatska are all competing in the tournament.

The 25-year-old Kalinina took part in the pro-am that benefitted her homeland. The list of players who came together to support war-torn Ukraine and show their support included Jessica Pegula, Desirae Krawczyk, Bethanie Mattek-Sands, Demi Schuurs, Erin Routliffe, Alexa Guarachi, and Alicja Rosolska.

Even though Poland’s Rosolska is far from home she is still eager to help anyway she can.

“Honestly I’m not helping like the people at home who are taking in people and refugees because I’m here playing tennis,” Rosolska said. “But we try to help. There are some tennis players from Ukraine, and we asked them, ‘What do you need?’”

One player reached out about getting help for her aunt finding a job after relocating. Rosolska said the population has grown so quickly, making the process of finding employment hard for many refugees.

“Suddenly the population raised about 50 percent, so it’s really difficult, but I’m hopeful because they’re more organized,” Rosolska said. “At the beginning, they just opened the borders and people were just coming and coming. We didn’t know how to organize everything. So, it was people going to IKEA buying beds, food, and opening their homes to the people they could handle.”

Rosolska remains cautiously hopeful as things in Poland become more organized.

“I think now it’s better, but the war is going on and people are still coming,” she said. “Until the war is over it’s going to be very difficult.”

Rosolska’s husband, Dan Champion, and their young son, Charlie Hugo, proudly watched from the sidelines as she played. Dan said the pro-am fundraiser was an important event at this year’s tournament. He was proud that his wife was taking part in the event and was impressed with the community’s support.

“First of all, I’m enjoying it because my wife is taking part and I see how excited everyone in Charleston is about tennis,” Champion said. “But that can’t be overshadowed owed by how important what’s happening in Ukraine is. It’s unbelievable. We actually live in Poland, so we have all of the refugees coming straight across the border. You could really feel it because you’re so close. But to come all the way out to Charleston and still see how many people care about it is impressive. It’s really nice to see.”

DOUG PINKERTON

Participants pledged $50,000 and the tournament matched the donation.

Former World No. 1 Tracy Austin and former World No. 3 Pam Shriver gave their time and support to the charity. Both Austin and Shriver serve on the board of the WTA charities.

“This tournament does so much for the women of the WTA tour but also does so much for charity as well,” Austin said. “The $100,000 that was raised – that’s a lot of money – was raised in one hour and a half... It’s really important there’s a number of Ukraine players that play on the tour. If you follow Elina Svitolina you know for the last month and a half she has struggled with it. She has decided to take herself off the tour for a while because she is so overwhelmed by the situation her family has to deal with in Ukraine.”

Austin added that it’s hard to know what kind of pressure the players could be under.

“Sometimes we forget the players are human too,” she added. “We see them out there hitting forehands and backhands but there’s a lot of backstories... There’s a lot they have to contend with, whether it’s media or expectations from the outside or expectations from the inside.”

THE HEALTH & WELLNESS SOCIAL NETWORK

In the health and wellness space, it's hard to feel confident about the decisions we make. It's hard to find reliable resources on the web, even though everyone goes there to find and evaluate health & wellness providers.

WE SET OUT TO CHANGE THAT.

We started Loopit to create a better online resource in health & wellness that benefits both consumers and businesses.

For consumers, we provide them a single place to find & evaluate a broad range of local health & wellness providers with better information, comparability and trustworthy content.

For businesses, we provide them exposure to local consumers pre-selected for health & wellness and give them powerful tools that enable them to regularly engage with consumers and showcase how they are different from their competitors.

Together, Loopit adds to the local community fabric – a resource that is exclusively local and exclusively health & wellness. Consumers looking for all types of providers – from medical doctors to fitness instructors to pet care to senior health and more – Loopit aims to be the go-to place for local consumers to find & evaluate local health & wellness providers.

KEEPING THEIR HEADS IN THE GAME

The COCO top seeds react to 'whirlwind' two years of turbulent times off the court

The past two years have been full of distractions – a global pandemic, continued rising social media scrutiny, and now the wartime conflict in Ukraine. How hard is it to keep your head in the game, when the world around you is experiencing such turbulent times?

When it's all on the line for the competitors in the Credit One Charleston Open (COCO), sometimes the players on the other side of the net aren't the only opponents they have to battle.

The past two years have been full of distractions – a global pandemic, continued rising social media scrutiny, and now the wartime conflict in Ukraine. How hard is it to keep your head in the game, when the world around you is experiencing such turbulent times? On Monday, The Daniel Island News sat down with each of the top-8 seeds in the tournament to talk about some of those outside pressures and how they cope when they hit the courts.

"I think last year I really struggled with it and it was very hard," said World No. 24 Madison Keys of the United States, the tournament's 2019 champion. "...Tennis felt so insignificant and I feel like, even now, they're still waves of that...At the end of the day, we're also here to be entertainment for fans, and that's a really important part of life. So it's just kind of remembering that."

For Keys, the new season has brought "a breath of fresh air and relief."

"It is still my job and I can't put that on pause, just because there's things going on," Keys said. "So I've definitely had to be very conscious of where I'm at, mentally, emotionally... But just knowing how bad everything felt last year and how overwhelmed I got and just really committing to not letting that happen again...Just seeing it, addressing it and then trying to get back on track."

For Tunisia native Ons Jabeur, the tournament's No. 4 seed, a little happiness can go a long way.

"I think I learned that there will always be something (going on) in this world, so whatever is happening...I try to stay as focused as I can," she said. "I try to do my part. I try to be as nice as possible. But it's a tough moment everywhere... I hope there will be peace in the world. That's what we all hope for."

"I've been lucky that a lot of Tunisians are kind of looking up to me," added Jabeur. "They call me the 'minister of happiness'...I don't know how they came up with that, but it's inspiring and I love coming back home...I'm not saying they follow every match, but they know who I am and they know that I am trying to do a good job."

Tennis has been an important outlet for Canadian player Leylah Fernandez, who, at 19, holds two career WTA singles titles and is ranked 19 in the world.

"Growing up I always thought of the tennis court as a way to escape from all the noise happening outside the court, so that's how I take it, day by day," said Fernandez. "I just try to get on the court and enjoy my time...That's where I feel more comfortable. That's where I am able to breathe, and express myself a lot easier than in other professions, other sports, or even in school."

Having a base to recharge and giving back to those in need has made all the difference for COCO player Jessica Pegula of the United States.

"I think everyone's different, but I think you just have to have some sort of good base or something that you can come back to, to kind of reset," noted Pegula, who just reached a career high world ranking of No. 13. "...I love playing tennis. Going on court, to me, is a great way to forget about things...I genuinely just love to play and even practice. It's a good distraction...But there's still so much good you can accomplish, whether it's locally at tournaments or at home...I think it helps so much mentally to kind of feel like you're doing your part."

American player Sloane Stephens, ranked World No. 36, described the last two years as a "never-ending whirlwind."

"I feel like every week, we're trying to figure out and navigate through something else and I think at some point it just gets exhausting," said the 2016 COCO champion. "A lot of people have lost time off their careers and playing, and kind of refocused and felt like they wanted to do other things, because it's just a lot. It's overwhelming."

But Stephens is thankful to be able to get "out of the house" now that the pandemic has subsided and return to some sense of normalcy.

"We've got to live our lives," she said. "...It's good to get out. I'm just happy to be out of that 'downer' phase."

Belinda Bencic of Switzerland, who won a gold medal in tennis at the 2020 Tokyo Olympics, has also felt the impact of world events and is working to keep things in perspective.

"I think when these kinds of things happen you just realize that tennis is not that important," said Bencic, who is ranked No. 21 in the world. "And I feel like when you go to the court and you're complaining about not being able to hit a serve inside the court or a backhand inside the court and there is a war going on in Ukraine and people are getting killed...it's not the same. Of course you know these things and you realize them, but every one of us has a job and we have to keep going and living our life and doing our job, so we try the best we can. But I cannot imagine right now for the players of Ukraine how they can actually play and focus. It's simply terrible."

The situation in Ukraine has hit a bit close to home for World No. 7 Karolina Pliskova, who has a personal connection to the war-torn country.

"My good friend and coach, Olga, she is from there," said Pliskova, a native of the Czech Republic. "So I know a lot of what is going on there, and it is brutal. It is tough. But still I think because it's not my country I am able to somehow block it...I never take my personal problems or the things which I'm dealing with off court on the court, and that's how I do it."

The fans make the difference for Paula Badosa of Spain, whose world ranking recently bumped up to No. 3.

"(Sunday) was amazing, the kids, everything," said the COCO's top seeded player, describing the tournament's family weekend activities. "It was even emotional for players to see all of this, because it's been very tough, for all of us. This is very nice to have people back and slowly getting back to normal...I think the key is to have good team by your side and (to be) surrounded by good people. Because alone, it's impossible."

Credit One Stadium rolls out the red carpet for players, fans alike

marie@thedanielislandnews.com

Amazing! Awesome! Impressive! These are just some of the adjectives fans used to describe the newly renovated Credit One Stadium. From a variety of cocktail and food options to a new array of amenities, the remodeled stadium is a game changer for fans and players alike.

For the first time since April 7, 2019, fans were finally able to get back in the game after the tournament had been canceled due to the pandemic in 2020 and the following year it was held without fans. Spectators were not disappointed as they checked out the first event at the new state-of-the-art stadium during Credit One Charleston Open Family Weekend.

Tournament Director Bob Moran was excited to welcome the fans back. "We're gonna provide the best experience possible, as soon as they walk in the gates."

Susan and Gary Wright have been attending the tennis tournament every year since moving to Daniel Island in 2010. They were both blown away by the updated facility.

As soon as Susan entered the stadium grounds she was in awe. "From the moment you walk in the entrance it is just beautiful! It used to be brick and now it's very clean and light. The attention to detail from the flower window boxes to the gates and the new fountain is great."

Susan even took some time out to do a little shopping. She appreciated the expanded offerings of brand name clothing and the extensive inventory of tournament merchandise.

Gary was impressed at how the construction turned out. "It's amazing what they've accomplished. You can't even tell they've just finished; it looks like it's been done forever."

Bernie Bell has been a fan of the women's tournament for years. He started going to the event back when it was held on Hilton Head. Bell was thrilled to finally get back to normal and return to the tournament.

"After three years, it is great to be back here to see some of the best female tennis players in the world," Bell continued. "The enhancements to the Credit One facilities are so amazing and everything is fresh! There's really something for everyone. To live here on the island and have this in my own backyard is unbelievable. I love being amongst all the fans and running into my tennis buddies."

A former F-16 pilot and FAA certified flight instructor, Mike Roller is only "impressed by the best... They made it bigger and more modern, but it's still intimate and hasn't lost that sense of community we like here on the island. This is the best venue of its size I've ever seen. I like the size – if it was bigger it would lose the intimacy and if it was smaller it couldn't draw the great stars we are already getting for the concerts this year."

Family Weekend lived up to its name with parents and children having a great time exploring the stadium's family-friendly options. Ashley and Allen Phelps were thrilled with all the choices available for families.

"We're very impressed with the food, the drinks, and everything they have for the kids," Allen said.

Ashley was especially happy with the expanded activities for children. "In 2019 they didn't have anything like this. There really weren't a lot of activities for the kids a huge improvement. It's been amazing, the kids haven't stopped moving since we got here. It's been a lot of fun."

Gerry Schauer brought his son and daughter to experience some family fun. He really appreciated the free admission for his children during the weekend events. "It's wonderful! Having the free tickets for the kids on the weekend was a really nice thing for them to do."

Michele Kraus helps coach her son Kyle's elementary school tennis program through the City of Charleston. She was thrilled when the city offered tickets to all the players. "That's what got us out here. I'm glad they're giving the tickets out for free, especially since it will inspire the kids when they come out and watch the tennis.

Ten-year-old Kyle not only watched some matches, he also got a chance to practice his tennis skills. One of his favorite activities was testing the speed of his serve. "It's fun and cool. There's a lot of different things to do here."

Andrew Krasny has been the voice of the tournament since 2013. The WTA announcer's sense of humor and obvious love of the game has made him a fan favorite. Even before he stepped foot inside the stadium, Krasny knew this year would be special for the fans.

"After we followed all the protocols so responsibly last year, I think fans being back will be even sweeter," Krasny said. "Charleston tennis fans are the most passionate, respectable, energetic, and hospitable fans I've ever seen."

Krasny said the renovation takes the event to the next level.

"Ben Navarro and Bob Moran's vision is exactly what tennis needs. State-of-the-art construction, court-side LEDs, booming sound system, bright lights combined with green clay and the biggest and most successful players in the world," Krasny added. "... I mean, what else could you ask for? When you look at the player field and the rich history of tennis in Charleston, you get the chills. That's what gets me most excited. Forget the green clay, let's install a red carpet for this blockbuster premiere! It's going to be like The Oscars! Mr. Navarro's commitment to present this world-class event in the way it deserves to be, leaves me almost speechless. And if you know me, that's pretty rare."

SERVING YOU LIKE A PRO in and out of Charleston

"As I am getting ready to close this week on a lake home in Northern Georgia, I am extremely thankful for the support that I received from realtor Cara Schaafsma along the path. Although Cara is a licensed realtor in South Carolina and not in the state of Georgia, her referral contacts that she provided were exceptional. Because my search was very broad (looking at multiple lakes in both Georgia and South Carolina), I needed a quarterback agent to look out for my interests across many different markets. Cara was able to navigate this for me and put me in touch with the right people. Additionally, Cara provided perspective and advice as I weighed options. Additionally, Cara even read through my contract offer in preparation for my discussions with the local agent (questions I never would have thought to ask). I highly recommend Cara as your agent or her services as a referral agent (which was my experience)."

Eco-friendly fashion brings sustainability to the stadium

news@thedanielislandnews.com

From the bleachers to the bathrooms, the new look of the Credit One Stadium will be on full display during the 2022 Credit One Charleston Open tennis tournament on Daniel Island. Even the staff will be getting a makeover.

While plenty of people are sure to notice the new performance gear donned by everyone from ball kids to volunteers, what may not be apparent to most attendees is the fact that the apparel is actually made from recycled plastic.

It's an eco-friendly approach made possible with a partnership between Vapor Elemental Wear — a Charleston-based clothing company that specializes in sustainably made outdoor wear — and RePower South, a state-of-the-art recycling facility located in Berkeley County.

Jackson Burnett, president of Vapor, said that when the company started 18 years ago, it sold performance apparel made from “virgin” materials to wholesale markets. But about 12 years ago, the business started exploring other methods of making clothing from primarily recycled materials. They started working with Reprive, a company that makes yarn out of plastic water bottles.

In the past couple years, Vapor shifted from manufacturing and providing products for other wholesale clothing companies to promoting its own brand and selling sustainable apparel directly to customers.

Burnett estimates they've been able to keep 4 million water bottles out of landfills and oceans. The gear created for the tennis tournament alone — nearly 2,500 items — reused 35,000 plastic water bottles.

Vapor first began working with the RePower South Recycling and Recovery Facility ahead of the 2020 Bridge Run. The plan, Burnett said, involved collecting all the water bottles from the Bridge Run, sending them to RePower South to be recycled, then selling them to Reprive to turn the plastic into yarn, and using that yarn to make shirts that runners can wear.

“We wanted to show the consumer the supply chain: that when they recycle a water bottle, high performance gear can come from your recycling,” Burnett said.

Although COVID shut down the Bridge Run that year and hampered their initial collaboration, the working relationship between Vapor and RePower South remained in place and continued to grow.

These eco-friendly efforts caught the attention of Credit One Charleston Open Tournament Director Bob Moran, who reached out to Vapor about creating specific gear for the entire tennis tournament staff.

The team seized the opportunity to swing this sustainable fashion movement into the spotlight. “It’s so important to create this awareness that recycling does make a difference,” Burnett added.

Brian Gillhuly, founder and CEO of RePower South, is encouraged by the tournament’s support and sees the event as a chance to highlight the advancements being made in the field of recycled materials.

Gilhuly credits Berkeley County leaders for their foresight and commitment to recycling, and investing in one of the most sophisticated facilities in the country. RePower South takes all the waste from the county — regular garbage as well as recyclables — and then sorts it accordingly, allowing them to recover more material and send more items on to be repurposed.

“We try to educate folks about what you can do with different materials,” Gilhuly said.

In recent years, companies have seen a growing demand from eco-conscious consumers for products made from recycled materials, and a realization that environmentally friendly practices can also be financially rewarding.

New technology allows for more cost-effective processes of taking used materials, such as plastic bottles, and creating plastic as if it were brand new — a recycled material that is as good or better than the original.

“This circular economy lets us re-use that plastic as efficiently as possible to create items from the recycled material,” Gilhuly said.

He remarked that having Vapor’s apparel at the tournament is a “tangible example of the importance of recycling and the local community; how we’re beginning to address one of the many factors of climate change.”

Tournament chef a trailblazer in the culinary arena

zach@thedanielislandnews.com

Before cooking progressed from home economics to culinary arts, it was simply an act to feed mouths. Little did Kimberly Brock Brown know that her life would revolve around managing the kitchen and making delicious food for professional athletes, celebrities and the most sophisticated of palates.

Brown, who is this year's Executive Chef for the Credit One Charleston Open, comes from more humble beginnings than her fine dining resume shows. Before she gained more than 30 years of experience in the culinary industry, before she became the first Black female chef to be elected to and is and now president of the American Culinary Federation (ACF) - she was a young girl who needed to learn how to cook for her siblings. Then, she began to love what she cooked.

In a kitchen overlooking the Windy City of Chicago, Brown first honed her cooking skills. She credits her parents for subjecting her to delectable homemade meals.

"Mom could throw down in the kitchen and dad wasn't bad either," Brown said with a smile.

After graduating high school with a fondness for home economics, Brown was poised to make a career out of cooking. She had college offers to culinary schools such as the University of Tennessee, but Brown elected to take a path less traveled and that made all the difference.

After rejecting an acceptance letter to Tennessee, at just 18 years old, Brown moved to Dallas to live with her sister. Soon, she was waiting tables and making more cash than her college educated sister.

One day Brown picked up a newspaper and read about a person graduating from an ACF apprenticeship at Dallas College. She knew she didn't stumble across this by happenstance, it was fate, and she decided to pursue it.

Brown graduated from the program as a certified cook and never looked back. Later on, after several stints that took her all around the southeast, she ended up in Charleston as a pastry chef at The Omni Hotel, which is now The Belmont Hotel. That is, until the tennis tournament came calling.

Brown worked in the kitchen at last year's tournament under the hospitality's general manager Travis Maynard. This year, there's no "COVID-19 bubble" or strict no contact with players or an experience without fans - and Brown was promoted to executive chef to oversee the entire operation.

From a logistical standpoint, Brown is tasked with feeding approximately 50 media personnel, 250 volunteers and employees and all the players breakfast, lunch and dinner on a daily basis. She summed up how much food she prepares for the tournament succinctly, "It's a lot."

As for the food, all of the dishes are labored from scratch. Brown oversees all of the shopping and ordering of ingredients. As for what's on the menu, honestly, a little bit of everything in order to satisfy everyone's appetite, especially players' taste buds on an international scale.

WHAT'S ON THE MENU?

As for the menu, which has both vegan and allergen-free options, for breakfast one can expect choices like quiche or frittatas alongside a myriad of berries. According to last year's inventory, Brown said that she went through six flats of strawberries per day. A flat contains 12 pints of strawberries. One pint weighs approximately three-quarters of a pound.

At lunchtime, salmon, short ribs, crab cakes and chicken are popular options. Around dinnertime, a carved turkey drizzled with cranberry sauce or prime rib or stuffed pork roll with chorizo, goat cheese and spinach.

For the players, the most pivotal meal of the day is breakfast. The most consumed product is the fruit smoothie, bar none.

“They love the fruit because it satisfies the sweet tooth but it’s also the quick energy,” Brown said. “... If you put the almond butter or peanut butter into it, even more so.”

The most time-consuming creations are items that demand a slow roast or marinade process.

Brown describes her cooking philosophy as “good looking food, tastefully prepared.”

To Brown’s knowledge, a player has never suffered a food illness or allergy-related issue from her creations. However, Brown shares the credit because she’s not a one-woman show. There are 10 cooks in her kitchen at any given time.

Over the span of her 30-plus year career, Brown served the likes of George H. W.

Bush, Prince, Anita Baker, Bill and Hillary Clinton. The list goes on, but Brown humbly avoided name dropping.

“It shouldn’t matter who’s who or what’s what, you take great pride in the food you put out,” Brown said.

After all the hustle and bustle of the food rush hours dies down, Brown finds time for herself and her own nutrition. However, when she’s preparing food, she’s not hungry and she’s not eating.

Brown finds herself wearing many hats than just a white, pleated chef’s hat. Not only is she a certified executive pastry chef, she is also a self-published author. Her latest work is “Here I Am! Chef Kimberly’s answer to the question “Where are the Female and Minority Chefs.”

Above all, Brown’s biggest accomplishment is not a culinary accolade or a special cookbook with a top secret recipe. It’s being a trailblazer for women, particularly of color, to break barriers in industries that have long had a history of a limited ceiling. The proof is in the pudding and Brown just so happens to be stirring the ladle of a creation that is a dream come true.

“I still have a hard time believing it,” Brown added. “... It’s kind of hard to imagine.”

Volunteers – essential workers at the Credit One Charleston Open

Debra Carroll and Gary Scott volunteer in the Media Center. This is Debra's 4th year and Gary's 6th year volunteering. Debra says she loves tennis and enjoys seeing how the tournament is run from behind the scenes and Gary notes that he is impressed with how the talented young players carry themselves and are "normal" people.

Karen Wigfall and Judy Townsend, a niece and aunt team from Summerville and N. Charleston, have volunteered as ushers for the last nine years. Both ladies say they volunteer because they love tennis.

Daniel Island resident Bill Booth is celebrating his 14th year as a volunteer. A former Peace Corps volunteer and Foreign Service employee, he is a natural as a Tournament Ambassador, greeting guests, answering questions, and giving directions.

Sisters Greta and Lola Hughey, 11 and 13, worked their first ever matches as ball girls during Saturday's qualifiers. The Daniel Island duo are home-schooled, which gives them flexibility to volunteer throughout the week.
